CHARLEVOIX COUNTY POMONA GRANGE

Hold Very Successful Meeting With Deer Lake Grange

MRS. E. J. CREYTS STATE SPEAKER

Patrons are Requested to Refuse to Sign Petitions for Resubmission

Of Local Option—Deer Lake Banner Grange—Next Meeting Will be at Ironton—Harmony Grange is Organized in Wilson.

Charlevoix Pomona grange held a very successful meeting with Deer Lake grange Thursday, about half the granges in the county having representatives present. After dinner the meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Mears and turned over to the lecturer. The program as previously published being carried out in full. Worthy Master Barber of Deer Lake giving the address of welcome which was responded to by Past Master Newville of Pomona.

The topic for general discussion, "How to Make Our Homes and School Grounds More Attractive and Healthful this Spring," was discussed by Brother Mears, who advocated the beautifying of the farm home as well as the school grounds; Brother Stacks, who believed home could be made attractive by the advoidance of intemperance in all things; The placing of home above the intemperance of striving to do too much on the farm and forgetting the farm home. Sister Creyts believed in the getting out of doors as much as possible by the housewife, the making of the back yard as attractive as the front, so the housewife could enjoy beauty while at work; The quitting of farm work early enough so the family could spend their evenings together out of doors on the porch. Brother Jones, who would make the health of the home the first consideration. Build on a high point of ground. Never keep the sunshine out of the home.

Mrs. Creyts gave a very helpful address on the influence of the grange both in public affairs and the broadening influence it had on rural life. In the evening Mrs. Creyts gave an eloquent address on "Opportunity," the central point of which was be prepared for your opportunity when it comes.

During the business sessions Master Mears announced the following standing committees:

Finance, Brothers Herman Barber, Jones and Printnall.

Membership, Sisters Minnie McGeorge, Paquette, and Crawford.

By Laws, Rozelle Heaton, Brothers Kundsen and Wilson.

Good of the Order, Sister Barber, Brothers David Smith and Burns.

Resolutions was passed requesting patrons to refuse to sign petitions for the submission of the question of local option in Charlevoix county next spring, as a fair trial should be given it before going to the expense of holding another election.

The question of revising the by-laws was carried over to the next meeting.

Deer Lake grange was declared the banner grange of the first quarter. The degree of Pomona was conferred upon a class of seven, Past Master of Gratiot Pomona DuBois in the chair.

A new grange called Harmony was reported organized in Wilson township.

Deer Lake patrons demonstrated their magnificent qualities as hosts. They also furnished music during the session. Next meeting will be held in Ironton June 23.

ECONOMY IN COAL BURNING.

Simple Device For Securing Full Fuel Efficiency.

The accompanying illustration shows how in a very simple way the gases in an ordinary furnace may be consumed and burned, thereby giving off a more uniform heat and maintaining an even temperature throughout the house continuously, night and day. It will effect a saving on the coal bin and produce more heat besides.

Fig. 1 shows how the common hot air furnace may be adapted to burn the gas of the coal. A small pipe, say one inch or one and one-quarter inch, is inserted through the upper part of the smoke pipe as the gases here are the hottest, terminating in close proximity to the smoke collar just inside of the radiator of the stove. The inner end may be fitted with a suitable spreader, such as shown in detail in Fig. 2. The cross pipes have a number of three-sixteenth inch holes drilled in the lower side or facing downward. The outer end of the pipe is fitted with some kind of damper to regulate the supply of air. As the cold air passes through this pipe it becomes heated and at its delivery end is of the same temperature as the gases, but as the specific gravity of this heated air is much greater than that of the gases in the furnace it drops down and mixes with the gases, forming a combustible mixture which now burns with a blue flame, just as in an ordinary gas stove. If a small piece of mica is inserted into the fire door this burning may be observed. It is a very interesting phenomenon.

FURNACE ARRANGED TO BURN GASES

In order to make the system a success the fire pot must be in perfect condition—that is to say, in a hot air furnace there should be no communication between the fire pot and the air chamber, no cracks and no loose joints. The fire door should be as air tight as possible. This may be made tight in the following manner: First file and remove all rust at the edge of the door until a metallic surface appears; then cut a narrow strip of asbestus and soak in salt water, after which place it around the door, and it will adhere. Put a little oil on the door frame and close the door. The asbestus will then fill up any opening and bake very hard on the door.

If everything below the grate were absolutely air tight no combustion would take place, but as all furnaces leak more or less this leakage is enough to support combustion in ordinary weather. In extremely cold weather, however, the slide in the ash pit door may be opened a little so as to furnish a little more air.

A damper is attached to the smoke pipe above the air pipe so that when open it will not cool off the air pipe.

A fire is built in the furnace in the ordinary way. Keep the air damper closed until a good fire is obtained, then put on some coal and keep the lower damper open for a few minutes, after which close all drafts and open the air damper and regulate the same according to the heat required—that is to say, more heat, more air. Through the before mentioned mica window observe the results. All the gases in the furnace will, however, not burn, as some are bound to escape unconsumed.

GASTRONOMIC HERESY.

Mixtures of Fruit and Oil Poison the Human System.

It is time to establish an epicurean inquisition. Gastronomic heresy is permeating America, and no one seems to be doing anything to check its spread. The women's magazines and the so called "house and home" pages of the newspapers these fine days contain under such title as "Seasonable Salads" many recipes that are nothing short of an abomination. Fruit salads they are called. The man of refined taste would call them nasty messes.

Eating is more than a fine art; it is a religion. The three cardinal virtues—faith, hope and charity—are its essence, and the greatest of these is faith. But the priests of the cook stove have wandered from the true faith and seduced their followers to worship strange gods, so the coco munients can trust them no more.

Of all their heresies perhaps the fruit salad is the most offensive to the true believer. I care not whether it be the device of man or woman, it is deserving of anathema. There are people who actually eat these things. There are women who profess to like them, but in the matter of gastronomy the tastes of women should not count, for there is not one woman in a million who has any respect for her stomach. There are even men who eat fruit salads, but they are the same men who mix sugar and water with their cigars, and such men are outside the pale of good taste.

I pick up one of the leading women's magazines and find a recipe which calls for oranges, grapes and pineapples served with French dressing. Oil and vinegar on fruit! The very idea is enough to turn the stomach.

It is important to uphold the liberty of the dining table, but this liberty must not be allowed to degenerate into anarchy. It is high time for the priests of gastronomy to excommunicate and anathematize all mixtures of fruit and oil—that is, sweet fruit, for such fruits as tomatoes and alligator pears have their place already upon the salad list. Let the great temples of good eating put such horrors on their index expurgatorius and bar all eaters thereof from the communion of the dining table.—Arthur Bennington in New York World.

Tuberculosis Vaccine

Formal announcement of the discovery of a vaccine made from dead tubercle bacilli that will demonstrate the presence of tuberculosis in the human system long before any physical signs are evident was made a few days ago by Dr. Clemens von Pirquet, professor of pediatrics in Johns Hopkins university, in an address delivered before the Pediatric society.

His discovery will undoubtedly be a great factor in reducing the heavy mortality from tuberculosis, as it gives a diagnosis of tuberculosis long before any signs of the disease can be detected by other means and enables the physicians to check it in its incipiency.

The method of Dr. von Pirquet for demonstrating the presence of a tubercelous condition somewhere in the human system is so simple that it can be readily understood by the lay mind. A vaccine is made of the dead tubercle bacilli, which is called tuberculin. One drop of this fluid is injected into the skin in almost the same manner as a vaccination. Within twenty-four hours it is possible to tell if tuberculosis is present in the body.

New Milk Preservative.

A new milk preservative is reported to have been discovered by W. D. Posey of Western Australia, by the use of which milk can be kept absolutely fresh for an indefinite period. A bottle of milk which had been treated and was said to be about five months old was handed to the government analyst for examination. He reported that it had apparently been heated, but that it was free from any of the ordinary preservatives and gave very good results. He saw no reason to believe that it was in any way detrimental to health. Dr. F. Audrew, who was given a sample two months old for bacteriological examination, said it gave almost the test of ordinary milk. It differed from any preserved milk he knew of in that respect. He made twelve cultures from the milk, which remained sterile after four days in an incubator.

Cause of Flywheel Explosions.

Failure of a flywheel, says Power and the Engineer, usually begins by the starting of a minute crack on the under surface of the rim at the point of greatest stress—viz, near the ends of the arms adjacent to the rim joint. The cracks gradually deepen until failure occurs, with all its disastrous consequences. These minute cracks are visible to an experienced eye, and careful inspection will aid materially in the prevention of flywheel explosions.

An Improved Pin.

After many years of faithful service the common domestic pin is likely to become old fashioned and to give way to an improved pin. It is charged against the domestic pin that its small head has disadvantages. These are remedied in the new domestic pin, which has a small straight bar to replace the head. It is made in six sizes, the smallest of which is about one inch in length and the largest about two inches.

The Exclusive Mahogany.

There is no such thing as a forest of mahogany. The mahogany tree lives by itself and stands surrounded by dense undergrowth in the tropic forests. Two trees to the acre is a liberal estimate of the number of trees in a forest.

A BRILLIANT IDEA.

It Established Mr. Josselyn as a Playwright.

By ELBERT J. BENTLEY.
[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"There's no use in further pleading, Mr. Josselyn. You are altogether too humdrum for me."

Mr. Josselyn was a struggling playwright who had never succeeded in getting a play accepted.

"Isn't it enough," he replied ingubriously, "that I am trying all the while to conjure up puppets to do romantic and absurd things without them myself? At any rate, I'm honest, and that's more than can be said of Jamoson, whom you will doubtless marry if you don't marry me."

"I would prefer that you should have more snap and less honesty."

"You would like me to rob some one, I suppose."

"It would be infinitely preferable to spending every day in the same uneventful way."

"Then I will turn robber."

"Do so, and I will marry you."

The expressions of the two faces at this moment were a study. The girl's eye sparkled with mischief; the man's countenance, which had been a picture of melancholy, showed that he had caught on to a possibility. She would marry him if he would rob some one. But robbing some one would necessitate a residence for awhile behind bars. He must think out a plan by which he might turn robber without submitting to the imprisonment. He was ingenious and had faith in his own ingenuity.

HE WAS MARCHED TO THE FOOTLIGHTS.

"Very well," he said. "I will rob some one."

"Nousense!"

"I mean it. You have forced me to take this course, and if I become a felon it will be your fault. Adieu. I will not ask you again until I have committed a robbery."

"Bravo!" she exclaimed, clapping her hands, while he walked away with a theatrical stride.

"Dear me," said Irene to herself, "I hope he isn't going to make a gander of himself. Who would have thought I was so necessary to him? Suppose he robs some one and that some one shoots him! Heavens! I wonder if I hadn't better stop him."

But as she went on thinking over the matter a desire to discover what he would do got the better of her fears, and she concluded to let the matter take its course. Besides, there was something fascinating in his risking a term in prison—indeed, his life—to gain her.

A month passed, and she heard nothing from Mr Josselyn. Then one day he wrote her that he had at last succeeded in securing the acceptance of a play, and he would be happy to have her go with him to the first night performance.

Miss Sweetland was very much pleased at the invitation, but she had been fretting at having been thus let alone and was now disappointed that her lover had no tender word for her. She feared he had accepted his dismissal.

The first night came, and with it came Mr. Josselyn with a carriage to take Miss Sweetland to see his play. Naturally he was very ill at ease. When one struggles for months, perhaps years, with a play and it is to be tested before an audience he is excusable for being agitated.

"You're all of a tremor," said the girl. "Don't worry. I'm sure it will be a success."

Their seats were in one of the proscenium boxes. Of course the house was crowded—theaters are always crowded on first nights—and there were many of Josselyn's friends among the audience.

The play was light comedy. The audience were captured at the very opening. The second act, which is liable to be dull, was very effective. Just before its close Josselyn asked Miss Sweetland to excuse him and left the box. A few minutes later there was a cry of "Help, help!"

Every eye in the theater was turned to the box opposite the one in which Miss Sweetland sat, where two men were tussling with each other.

"I'm being robbed; he's got my watch!" cried a voice.

These words had scarcely been spoken when one of the two men ran from the box.

The excited audience sat expectant for a few minutes, when another voice cried:

"They've got him!"

Two policemen in uniform were seen marching a man out of the theater.

Meanwhile the curtain had been rung down.

The stage manager appeared from behind a wing and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, one of the most daring robberies in the annals of crime has been committed right here in this very theater. Thinking that before the villain is taken to the station you would like to have a look at him, I have requested the police to bring him for a moment on to the stage."

There was a clapping of hands, the curtain was rung up, and in a few minutes two policemen advanced from the right center with a man handcuffed between them. The robber wore a mask and was in evening dress. He was marched to the footlights.

"Take off his mask!" ordered the stage manager.

A policeman removed the mask.

For one moment there was silence; then a deafening shout filled the theater.

"It's Josselyn!" cried a voice.

"Who's Josselyn?" asked a woman.

"Why, the man who wrote the play, of course."

Meanwhile the shouts continued, while Mr. Josselyn stood between the policemen, each holding him by a handcuff. Miss Sweetland, who was not versed in stagecraft, not dreaming but that her lover had really robbed a man for her sake, was in agony. Not only would he be sent to the penitentiary, but this disgrace at being marched on to the stage in the presence of an audience among whom were nearly all the friends he possessed was horrible and would kill any sensitive man. Josselyn gave one look at the girl; but, seeing that she was suffering inexpressible torture, his face broke into a smile.

Many of the audience were deceived, so realistically had the scheme been carried out, and for a moment believed that the man before them had committed the robbery in which he had been caught. But Josselyn's smile made it apparent that the crime was a part of the performance. There was a fresh outburst of shouting, this time accompanied by a thunder of applause.

"By Jove," exclaimed one of the audience, "that's the best stage gag I ever saw! It's enough to make a success of a dead failure."

"Your fortune's made," the stage manager whispered to Josselyn.

"This means a 300 night run," muttered the manager, with a chuckle.

"Speech!" cried the audience with one voice.

The policemen released the arms of the prisoner, and, with the bracelets still on his wrists, he stepped forward and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your sympathy"—

"You don't need it; you've made a hit!" interrupted a voice.

"This is a hard world," continued the playwright. "For what we desire we must make great sacrifices. I have made a guy of myself tonight for an object near to my heart—an object"—

"A hundred thousand in royalties!" interrupted another voice.

"Shut up!" cried one who wished to hear the speech.

Meanwhile Josselyn stood looking at the girl for whose sake he had made a guy of himself with a look of humorous triumph in his eye. She drew a long breath of relief, and gradually an unwilling though radiant smile forced itself over her features. When silence was restored he concluded his speech by stating that the object of his life had been to write a successful play, and this heart's desire had been accomplished. Then, thanking them for their appreciation, he bowed, retired, the curtain was rung down, and when it was raised again it was upon the first scene of the third act.

Josselyn had "killed two birds with one stone." He had kept his contract with Miss Sweetland and had insured the success of his play. Everybody knows that a play depends upon its start. The first night is immensely important. By his robbery the author had put his audience in good humor for the third act, the crucial point of a play. The consequence was that, while he noticed several defects in it, which he corrected the next day, the audience pronounced it perfect.

Josselyn returned to his box. He found Miss Sweetland sitting behind a curtain and took a seat beside her. Notwithstanding the fact that all eyes were upon him, beneath the balcony that concealed him from his chest downward he felt a soft hand stealing into his. His face broke into a charming smile, and the audience, taking it to itself, gave three hearty cheers for the playwright.

When the curtain went down on the third act if there had been any doubts that the play would be a success they had disappeared. The next morning the dreaded critics all gave favorable notices, and from that time for months the box office was crowded.

While Mr. Josselyn and Miss Sweetland were riding to her home she said to him:

"I am very sorry that I should have put you to so much trouble. I'm not worth it."

"Indeed you are, sweetheart. But, instead of putting me to trouble you gave me a brilliant idea that will insure the success of my play, establish me as a playwright and make my fortune."

"Which, I suppose, I shall share. It isn't every girl that is so well paid for her folly."

FOR CHURNING RESULTS.

Careful Heating of Churning Room and Cleanliness Necessary.

There can be no definite rule laid down as to the temperature at which the cream should be churned, as different creams require different temperatures. The fat is in the form of microscopic globules, and they must have a certain degree of softness if they are to unite. When the cream enters the churn that is properly ripened and contains 20 to 30 per cent fat the temperature should be such that the cream will churn in thirty to forty-five minutes. This will give an exhaustive churning and leave the butter in a condition in which it can be easily handled without injuring the texture.

Before putting the cream in the churn the churn should be thoroughly scalded and as thoroughly chilled with cold water. The advantage of this is that it will freshen the churn and fill the pores in the wood so that the cream and butter will not stick to it. The outside temperature of the churning room should be as nearly as possible the same as the churning temperature. If it is warm the cream will warm up rapidly, and the butter will likely be soft and will require more washing to remove the buttermilk. It is useless to lower the cream rapidly to the churning point just before churning. It should be there at least two hours before churning. The reason for this is that fat is a slow conductor of heat, and, although the serum has cooled and the thermometer reads the right temperature, the fat has not actually reached it, and the results would be the same as if churned at an actually higher degree.

Milo Maize For Horses.

The farmer who plants a good acreage of milo has practically insured for himself a good supply of grain for his work teams. Horses and mules have stood hard work well all summer, such as breaking prairie, with no grain but milo. Horses doing heavy farm work should be given three good feeds of milo grain a day. Milo in the head is usually fed, one-half more heads being given at a feed than would be given ears of corn. Most teamsters prefer to feed milo in the head to horses, cutting the grain stem off close to the head. The malu stem of the head and the many little stems that hold the seeds force the horses to do a large amount of chewing before the feed can be swallowed, and this mastication grinds the grain and mixes it with the saliva, greatly increasing the proportion digested.

The seeds of milo are small, and where the threshed seed is fed to horses it is chewed very little, and much of the seed passes through undigested. Feeding milo in the head saves all expense of preparation, and the small stems of the head eaten with the grain seem to aid in diluting the grain in the stomach, making it more digestible.

A Helpful Suggestion.

The young man had married the rich man's daughter and wasn't killing himself with work to support her. One day the father called him up to talk to him.

"Look here," he said emphatically, "why don't you go to work?"

"I don't have to," the son-in-law replied, with brazen effrontery.

"Well, you will have to."

"Why will I?"

"Because, sir, I can't live always to support you."

"But you will leave us something?"

"Not much, I won't. There won't be anything to leave."

The son-in-law was alarmed.

"Great Jupiter!" he exclaimed. "You don't mean to tell me that you have nothing?"

"That's about it."

The son-in-law devoted himself to profound thought for several seconds.

"I have a suggestion to offer," he said in a businesslike manner.

"What is it?" asked the old gent.

"Well, I suggest that you take out, say, a $20,000 life insurance on yourself to save wear and tear on my mind."—London Answers.

Brought a Smile.

"I regret to announce," said the substitute preacher, "that your beloved pastor, Dr. Pomeler, is indisposed and will be unable to occupy this pulpit for several weeks. Our text this morning is from Hebrews iv, 9, 'There remaineth, therefore, a rest for the people of God.'" And he could not think why some of the congregation smiled. —Boston Transcript.

Record Corn Yield.

In a corn growing contest in North Carolina 227 bushels were grown on one acre. It is believed that this breaks official records in this country.

THE SHEPHERD

Grade the flock just as carefully as you grade the dairy herd. Weed out the poor animals and keep the best.

Judicious Feeding Necessary.

A flock will go through a winter sheltered by an open shed, but no flock ever came out of a winter in thrifty condition without judicious feeding.

Shearing Machines' Worth.

Shearing machines beat hand shearing every time. They are not expensive, and they cause fewer wounds and do the work more evenly than the average farmer can do with the old fashioned shears.

Easy to Build a Feed Rack.

A good rack for feeding sheep can be made by almost any sensible farmer. About all that is needed is a support for the hay so that it shall not fall to the ground and be wasted and also be handy for the sheep to get at.

Gains In Lambs.

Lambs which are well cared for in the spring and which have a run on good grass alone when six months old should average from 80 to 100 pounds and at eighteen months, with good care, should average 130 to 160 pounds.

Attend to the Wounds.

Sheep become lacerated on wire fences or other objects. Watch the wounds carefully and if maggots appear wash the wounds with a weak solution of carbolic acid and water. If the wounds are deep and difficult to reach inject the solution with a small glass syringe.

ACCORDING press dispatches to Senator Julius Ceasar Burrows' backers have about decided to pull him out of the race, the example of Aldrich and Hale in retiring being thought a good one for him to follow, as the people are getting tired of the brand of politicians of which Burrows is a shining example. Whether he pulls out or not the people are preparing to put him out September and put Hon. Charles E. Townsend in.

DON'T it look good to you to see the candidates announcing their candidacy and asking for the support of the people instead of the few who formerly controlled in this county? Come along gentlemen, send in your announcements, we love to print them free.

PUBLIC LOVE LETTERS.

Curious Appeals Appear In Newspapers of Southern Italy.

The printed love letters in the advertising columns of papers in southern Italy fill the tourist with wonder, mingled with deep respect for the sentiment which will pay for their insertion. The following letter, taken from the Palermo Ora, contained 174 words, which at the advertised rate of a cent a word would cost $1.74. If the Italian saying, "A lira is a dollar," is true, this would equal a bill of $8.70, which would require a pretty devoted American lover to pay:

"Dearest Little One—What have I done to thee? Why this silence after thy promise? I experience from it a grief so violent that it renders me helpless.

"Thou art good, my Santuzza, as good as dear; thou knowest how this makes me suffer. Why dost thou do it? Thou knowest how I love thee, that thou art my religion. Have I offended thee?

"I seek intense occupation to keep me calm, but a thousand thoughts gnaw my soul. Perhaps while you amuse yourself you do not know how your silence agitates me. Oh, dear Madonna mine, darling, darling, my blessed joy, do not forget me; thou art my life, all there is for me, my good Santuzza.

"I could not longer live without thee. Forgive me if I have offended thee in any way, blessed little bird. Here all is as if thou wert to arrive at any moment. I seek to create for myself this most beautiful illusion, ever speaking to thee, vainly expecting news from thee with every post, with a violently beating heart.

"Do not believe me bad; I love thee so much; I kiss thy dear lips, thy most entrancing little countenance, all infinite passion and tenderness. I am insane to hear once more thy dear, enchanting voice."

There were eleven letters of this kind in the same issue of the Ora, about an average number for a Palermo paper. Such letters are found in all Italian papers, but they grow shorter and shorter as one travels north until in Milan one line in the "agony column" suffices to express the lover's anguish.

A style which seems theatrical to an American seems perfectly natural to an Italian. He will write exactly this sort of love letter in private. Some of the published letters of Napoleon to Josephine in their early married life are in the same strain.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

HE TOOK THE CAKE.

A Story of William Black, the Novelist, and Mary Anderson.

One time when Mary Anderson was playing in "The Winter's Tale," in Dublin, William Black, the novelist, who was very intimate with Miss Anderson and her family, insisted upon assuming the part of one of the supers, who was dressed as a very old man with a venerable beard and locks that fell upon his shoulders. When Black went upon the stage in this disguise he walked about among his fellow supers with unceasing restlessness and, judging by the wild motions of his arms, seemed to be addressing to each in turn an impassioned harangue. The audience began to wonder who the new actor was and what on earth he was doing in a play in which neither Shakespeare nor the stage managers ever intended him to appear.

Presently came the time when it was the business of Perdita to distribute flowers among the peasants, among whom Black had his place. Miss Anderson, carrying on the practical jokes of the family circle, had prepared a surprise for this moment, and, having distributed flowers among the less favored supers, she handed to Black a large cake crowned with a wreath of laurel, saying as she did so, "You take it." In allusion to his triumphs in the contest of wits at the supper table.

To her consternation, Black showed that he was quite prepared to carry out the jest, for, taking the cake from the hands of Perdita, he immediately distributed it in substantial portions to his hungry fellow supers, who, finding it to be of excellent quality, began to munch it greedily under the eyes of the house.—Exchange.

Ungrateful.

"Women are an ungrateful lot."

"Anything special?"

"Yes. My wife urged me to go into politics, and ever since I didn't get nominated she has talked about what a lot of new furniture she could have bought with the money I spent."

Farm and Garden

MAKE YOUR OWN CALABASH

Any Farmer Can Grow the Gourd and Transform It Into a Pipe.

Do you want a calabash pipe? If so you needn't pay a dealer from $5 to $12 for one. Grow it and make it yourself. After you have grown the gourd you can make the pipe in about half an hour at a cost of half a dollar. So says the bureau of plant industry at Washington. And your homemade calabash, if you take proper pains in the making, will be just as artistic and satisfactory as the expensive imported one.

The calabash is made from a South African gourd. Until recently this gourd was not grown elsewhere, but the American consul at Cape Town,

CALABASH PIPE GOURDS.

H. L. Washington, sent some of the calabash seeds to the department of agriculture in 1906. Since then the government has discovered by experimentation that the calabash will grow almost anywhere in the United States.

The gourd seed is planted about like melon seeds and at the same period. It grows luxuriantly, each vine producing many gourds. Not all of them are suitable for pipe material. Many are blighted by insect bites or other causes. Most of the gourds crook their own necks in growing. If the grower wants a pipe neck with artificial kinks he can get what he wants by bending the pliable neck in the way it is desired for it to grow and then waiting until the gourd matures.

Cut off the big end of the gourd at the point indicated for your pipe bowl's top. Clean out the pith. Cut off the neck end and make a little hole with your knife blade. Get a curved pipe mouthpiece with a screw thread. One from any old pipe will do, but it should be carefully boiled beforehand to cleanse it from nicotine deposits.

Screw the thread into the opening in the neck of your gourd. If you want an inner pipe bowl that can be taken out for cleaning, you can buy a cheap one, such as is used in meerschaums, at a tobacconist's store. A little plaster of paris poured into the calabash bowl and the inner bowl then pressed down flush with the top of the cut off gourd will make the inner bowl fit snugly. Don't leave it in the plaster of paris more than three minutes when fitting, for if you do it will set hard and be permanently stuck. Take it out after two or three minutes, when the plaster is partly dried.

After the plaster dries thoroughly put the inner bowl back, get a pipeful of good tobacco, light a match, place the bit in your mouth, puff away and dream dreams of auld lang syne or castles in the air. You are now a calabasher, qualified and passed by the United States government.

Uncle Sam says the farmers must not imagine that they can make a big income by growing calabashes and selling the gourds for pipe material. Gourds are imported now at from 25 cents to $2 a dozen. It is the necessity of hand work in making the pipes that causes them to be expensive when you have to buy them. No two gourds are of the same shape or size. Consequently all the cutting and drilling must be done by hand. It is worth while for a smoker to have a pipe which he has made himself.

Tips For Horsemen.

Horses that stand up to the bit in the same way will do more work, with less wear and tear to themselves and the driver, than others not so mated.

Such pairs are more attractive to look at and will always bring a good price when offered for sale.

Here is a hint in the fact that the sale of saddle horses in New York city alone has been 20 per cent more during the present year than it was last year.

Go down to the stable before bedtime and see that everything is all right with the horses. You may save a good horse by just that little thing.

More than one horse has been ruined for life by being made to pull hard when young.

Worms In Horses.

Horses that are poorly kept and become reduced in flesh are very liable to become wormy. Here is a remedy that has been fully tried and proved to be a first class corrective of that condition: Thoroughly mix a teaspoonful of pulverized smoking tobacco with a ground feed of corn or bran two or three times a week and give it to the horse. It will expel the worms, improve the horse's condition and make the hair glossy.

This remedy will not injure a mare with foal, but it pays to be very careful about giving any medicine to mares in that condition.

Dipping Sheep Effectively.

To rid sheep of external parasites or the scab mite they should be dipped in some effective dip. Coal tar dips are effective, nonpoisonous and do not ordinarily injure the wool. They are therefore considered among the best. Before using all dips should be tested.

THEATRICAL

Wallie Campbell, manager of the Majestic said he would give us real city shows and to say he has kept his word is putting it mild, starting with vaudeville then Ina and Company followed by vaudeville and is now playing Tom Marks Stock Co., without a doubt the best stock company ever seen here and if the house is not sold out every night this week "Wallie" will have a right to feel that Charlevoix don't want anything in the line of shows. The stage has been made larger and new scenery is now being built. When done (and it was to be ready Wednesday night) it will comprise a front curtain, street, picture sheet, parlor, kitchen, woods and horizon. The stage has been rewired and now has fifty 16-candle power lamps on the same. The Majestic is now one of the best equipped as well as the largest stage of any vaudeville house in the state. The Tom Marks Company opened Monday night with the comedy drama, "The Irish Boarder." Mr. Marks, playing the title roles, is very clever and takes with the audience at the start. His daughter, Miss Arliegh Marks, makes a decided hit in her specialties. Frances Kane is the best character woman Charlevoix has ever seen. Chris Allen is a star in his comedy characters and specialty work. The other characters are experts in their respective places and form a well balanced company, which leaves the sentiment, "I hope they return again," with the theater people in this city. The plays for the balance of the week are as follows: Thursday night, "The Hypocrite," Friday night "The Red Cross Nurse" or "Sergeant O'Rallerty." Saturday night, "Garry Owen" or "The Irish Detective."

Manager Bridge announces that the next attraction at the Charlevoix theater will be, "The Quality of Mercy," May 6. "The Girl that's all the Candy" is also booked for May.

BUILDING A STONE FENCE.

Connecticut Farmer Tells How to Utilize Bowlders That Are In the Way.

One of the most picturesque sights in New England is the stone wall fence. The utilization of loose stones, which otherwise lucumber the ground, for the construction of harriers necessary to farm life used to be a leading industry in New England before the advent of the barb wire fence. Even now many farmers extend their stone fences just to get rid of the rocks. And there are plenty of rocks in other parts of the country that can be used to the same useful purpose.

Here, however, is a brave farmer, F. H. Plumb of Tolland county, Conn., who goes further than picking up and piling stones. He believes in breaking up bowlders and using the fragments for fence material. Says Mr. Plumb:

An occasional bowlder here and there in a level, fertile field ought not to dishearten any robust, enthusiastic farmer from breaking them up and clearing them away. Dynamite, a sledge, a few chains and a steady yoke of oxen or team of horses will work wonders in a short time in many a field.

A knowledge of rocks, however, will prove of great assistance before work of any kind with them is undertaken. Some are apparently as hard as flint; others so soft they can almost be crushed between the fingers. Some have a grain similar to a log so they may be split by wedges and half rounds quite straight and true. Others will hammer or split into all sorts of forms and sizes. But there are few stones a stone mason cannot trim into any form he desires.

If we closely examine a bowlder, say, three to six feet long, we may notice it has a grain its entire length and all the way through.

A STONE WALL FENCE.

I noticed my stonemason would take a drill twelve inches long and three-quarters of an inch in diameter and, with a two or three pound hammer mounted on a twenty inch handle, drill a hole six inches deep in the bowlder in a few minutes, depending on the hardness of the stone. Then along the same seam of the rock another hole was drilled, and perhaps another and another, these holes being about six inches apart.

Half rounds and a wedge were then inserted in each hole, the wedges gently started, and then the entire length of wedges driven home evenly by means of a twelve pound sledge. With this treatment the big hard rocks seemed to generally split evenly and straight through. If they did not, after the rock was split a few heavy blows with the big sledge would knock off any protruding pieces.

But there is a knack in knocking a stone to pieces or trimming the stone with the side of a sledge hammer or of its cutting edge that takes time, thought and observation to acquire.

My job was this: Extending easterly along the roadway from my house was an old tumble down wall that was the most unsightly place to my family on the entire farm. The land inside the wall is about ideal for a rank growth of timothy, and plenty of stones of all sizes, from a pebble to enormous bowlders, were there.

The smaller bowlders, such as a yoke of cattle could draw on a stone boat, and all the smaller stones the boys and myself had picked off after the plowing of the past three springs and hauled along the wall. Of course it was built before my day. Some of the stones were thrown in loosely, others were carefully placed, but all were covered with soil and more than a foot of soil had accumulated on the wall, so that it was higher than before, and all sorts of weeds and brush began to grow up among it.

As the wall lay, it was made up of stones of all sizes, many so big they had to be split or broken and used as foundation pieces before work could be begun.

Ordinarily for a new wall a strip is plowed and dug out just below the frost line. As my wall was only to be rebuilt this was unnecessary, for it had a good foundation.

My wall was laid with a straight face on the road side, while on the field side rough cobbles without a straight face were set up at a slant of about one foot to the four foot wall.

In no part of the wall were the stones just thrown or dumped in. Every stone was placed one at a time, no matter how small, and so placed that it rested firmly on its base, with as little tipping or looseness as possible.

A wall put up in this careful manner ought to last several generations.

INDOOR BED TENTS.

Device For Securing Fresh Air While Body Is In Warm Room.

Fresh air at night and plenty of it is the cry that is going up among those who are determined to subdue the "great white plague," and with these persons it has become more than a fad—a necessity.

For these reasons many persons are using the new fresh air tents which are fastened inside the window. While several varieties are made, they all involve similar principles of construction, and they have the merit of not being conspicuous. In using the window tent the side of the bed near the top is placed next to the open window. The tent, which is made of heavy canvas or awning cloth, comes down from the inside of the window over the side of the bed and over the pillow. It reaches to the middle sash and can be adjusted by tightening a screw and is capable of being moved from one window to another. With the head once under the tent one can actually breathe the fresh air from the window, while the rest of the body is in the bed covered by the bedclothes and in a warm room.

These tents have become popular, for they are large enough so that the face can be close to the window or on the pillow and three feet back. A little celluloid window in the side of the tent next to the room allows the user to look out and to converse with those in the room, and two persons can sleep in the same bed, while only one uses the tent.

This so far has been a most successful device for admitting fresh air on sanitary principles to a sleeping room.

STORM AWNING RAISED, SHOWING SLEEPER.

It enables one to breathe the outside air without danger of being chilled or exposed to drafts and colds. Some who tried this tent felt that the fresh air was too cold in storms or wet weather, and they use an outside awning, which can be adjusted at pleasure. With these tents the body can be kept warm, while the head, which is toughened to the cold, can obtain the stimulation it needs. This last can be modified by a cannon flannel hood, which can be made so it will come down over the shoulders and have a face opening large enough to leave the eyes, mouth and nose exposed. The cape of this hood covers the shoulders if by any accident the bedclothes slip off them.

Tobacco a Cause of Heart Disease.

J. N. Hall of Denver gives a detailed study of 600 cases of heart disease seen by him in private practice. In many cases more than one lesion existed in a single individual. There were 444 organic valvular cases and ninety-two classified as myocarditis. There were ten cases of septic endocarditis. The author gives a statement of the signs by which he made the diagnosis of each kind of valvular lesion. The mitral valve was affected 385 times, the aortic 51 times, tricuspid 13 times, the pulmonic 6 times. Causation included rheumatism, the predominating cause; chorea, scarlet fever, pneumonia, nephritis, tonsilitis and many other diseased conditions. Tobacco was the most frequent cause of functional diseases of the heart. In twenty cases of valvular disease in children a decided lack of growth was shown. The author emphasizes the importance of careful estimation of the muscular capacity of the heart as the guide in prognosis and therapeutics.

A Widow's Discovery.

The Look on the Bright Side society got down its ledger this afternoon and enrolled among its members the name of a newly made widow. "I missed John so much when I sat down to meals," she said, "that I began eating off the pantry shelf and find in this way I do not have to clean my dining room more than once a week, and it makes my work so much lighter."—Atchison Globe.

Judge Palmer has granted a writ of certiorrari in the county seat removal contest proceedings on the part of certain business men of Newaygo. The writ is directed to the board of supervisors and directs the board to show cause why the election resulting in the removal of the county seat to White Cloud should not be declared illegal on the grounds that the ballots were prepared by the county clerk instead of the election board, that the proposition was not clearly defined and that the ballots did not contain the words "yes" and "no" for the purpose of voting. The county records already have been removed to White Cloud.

A case of considerable interest and importance was argued before Judge Shepard last week. The saloon interests of the village of Wolverine and Wolverine township were the defendants with about 100 of the residents of Wolverine and the prosecuting attorney of Cheboygan county as complaintants. The suit began when the village council of Wolverine refused to consider a remonstrance signed by 102 voters of Wolverine asking that the village refuse surety bonds for saloon licenses. The council held that 102 signers was not enough according to the last registration books, but the complainants claimed that the number was a majority of the total vote cast at the last election for governor. Upon the council refusing to consider the remonstrance the prosecuting attorney began suit before Judge Shepard and secured a temporary injunction restraining the council from accepting surety bonds. The defendants claimed that the prosecuting attorney had no power to start suit in the matter. An immediate decision was desired by the defendants who asked that the injunction be dissolved. The judge held that the petition contained the requisite number of names and also that the prosecuting attorney was wholly within his rights and power in starting action and refused to dissolve the temporary injunction. The case will be taken to the supreme court. C. S. Rielley and C. B. Barghorn appeared for the defense and D. H. Crowley, prosecuting attorney, and V. D. Sprague for the complainants.

The board of state auditors have voted not to settle the case of the Michigan Central railroad in which to collect some $4,000,000 back taxes, the road offering the state $125,000 to settle. As a counter suit the road has a suit for $6,000,000 damages for the repeal of its special charter.

Secretary of State Martindale and Land Commissioner Russel voted not to settle while Governor Warner and State Treasurer Sleeper were in favor of settling for this sum and all cases being dropped on both sides.

Gov. Warner issued the following statement upon which he based his reason for wanting to settle the suits:

"I favored the adjustment of the two road cases, basing my position upon the advice and counsel of the attorneys who have so ably looked after the state's interests in the litigation. It seemed to me safe to follow the advice of such men as Judge Knappen, Justice Blair, Attorney General Bird, Otto Kirchner and Thomas E. Barkworth. They believed that the proposition of the railroad company to the state to drop both cases upon payment to the state of $125,000 should be accepted.

"I believe the suit pending against the railroad company for back taxes will result in the state's favor and the verdict may be several million dollars and the judgment may be rendered in the very near future. The circuit court decision however, is but the beginning of the contest and appeals to higher courts will put the final settlement far into the future.

"The Michigan Central suit for six million dollars damages growing out of the repeal of their special charter is yet to be tried. The two cases will be in the courts for years to come and the expense of the litigation to the state will run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. I believe the advice of the eminent counsel for the state could have been followed and such a course would have met with public approval.

NEEDFUL KNOWLEDGE

Charlevoix People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are so unmistakable that they leave no ground for doubt. Sick kidneys excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The backaches constantly, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighed down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger of dropsy, Bright's Disease or diabetes. Any one of these symptoms is warning enough to begin treating the kidneys at once. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Charlevoix proof.

W. George Linn, P. O. Box 41, Charlevoix, Mich., says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years and have found that they are very effective in relieving troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn of a case in which Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

SPECULATING ON MARGIN.

American and English Ways of Doing It Are Very Different.

In America a speculator's capital (with an exception to be noted below) is necessarily at least the size of his margin in his broker's hands, though it is to be feared that in only too many instances it is just this and nothing more.

On the London Stock Exchange another method prevails which, says Moody's Magazine, it is probable has done more in the long ago past to give stock speculation its bad name than all the episodes of an unsavory nature which have ever occurred on American exchanges. In London after the inevitable introduction to a broker the new customer gives his order, but makes no deposit at all.

The broker is supposed to learn something of his new client's means and how far he should be allowed to commit himself. Twice a month the English have what they call their settlement days. A customer long of a stock whose commitment has gone somewhat against him is then required to pay the differences, as they are called, between his purchase price and the current quotation.

He must also pay a charge called a contango for holding the settlement over into the next fortnightly period if he does not wish to close the commitment. As a consequence of this way of doing business a speculator may be trading on a few points margin in reality or, in fact, on no margin at all. He may be utterly penniless without the broker knowing it.

That this method works out with fewer losses in England than it would do here is due to the fact that the social and economic strata to which an Englishman belongs are much easier to determine than the corresponding facts among us, and also that an introduction means more there than here, as the introducer is regarded as to a certain extent responsible morally for the business deportment of his friend.

It is worth while observing (and this is the exception referred to above) that in certain instances the methods pursued in American stock exchange houses are the same as those obtaining in London. Little as the fact is known, it is not an infrequent custom for very wealthy speculators to have no fixed margin or even no margin at all with their brokers.

If a man of this sort loses on a commitment he sends his broker a check for the loss. If he wins his broker's remit to him for his gains. The broker dislikes to offend a very powerful client by troubling him for funds, and hence takes risks with his account which he would not dream of taking with the account of smaller men. Instances of this sort sometimes become public in cases where the broker is forced into bankruptcy, whether owing to this cause or not.

Could Do For Herself.

She was a very delightful but a very aged lady—over ninety—and her friends and relatives and even chance acquaintances, drawn by her exquisite personality, all did her homage and, as the saying is, "waited on her hand and foot."

She accepted it all very graciously, but with some inward rebellion, for to a very old and close mouthed friend she once said, with a qualut pucker of lips and brows:

"I am reminded sometimes of the old lines:

"Two were blowin' at her nose,
And three were bucklin' at her shoon."

Snowdonia, Wales, is given credit for being the wettest place in Great Britain by reason of 237 inches of rainfall in 1908. The gauges placed on a grassy slope 1,480 feet above sea level on the Snowden side of Llydaw and examined each day at 9 a. m. gave the above number of inches of fall for the year.

Previous to this report it was always considered that the Styre, at the end of Borrowdale, Cumberland, was the wettest place in England. The average annual rainfall at that point is about 170 inches.

MAD TOM THURSBY.

How He Showed That There Was Method In His Madness.

By SARAH BRYCE VAUGHAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

One night, or, rather, one morning, about fifty years ago a group of young men were standing before a sideboard in the city of Nashville, Tenn., drinking mint juleps. They were all in fancy costume, for they were attending a masquerade ball, and strains of music and laughter came in from the adjoining rooms. The season was the beginning of autumn, but in that southern location warm weather lingered. Indeed, the "galleries" were inclosed to gain room for the guests.

"What shall we do for hunting this season?" remarked one of the young men at the sideboard. "The country is all taken up, and every estate has a sign up forbidding shooting on the premises."

"Last year," said another, "we were permitted to shoot on the Woodbridge estate. There was no one there except caretakers and servants, but now Miss Woodbridge has returned from the east to take possession of her inheritance, and I see that a notice against trespassing and shooting has been put up."

Among these young men was one Tom Thursby, a graduate of the University of Virginia, who had come out to Tennessee to practice law. Some called him "Mad" Thursby, but whether that was because he was crack brained or insisted in doing things as no one else would do them is a question.

"I think," said Thursby musingly, sipping his julep, "that I shall shoot on Miss Woodbridge's estate."

"What!" exclaimed one of the group. "Trespass on the estate of a young lady?"

"No; I shall gain her permission."

"She has already refused it to others; she can't consistently give it to

"MAY I BEG A BOON?"

you. What influence do you propose to bring to bear upon her?"

"None."

"Do you know her?"

"No; I have never seen her."

"Very well; I'll bet you $50 you don't shoot this fall on Miss Woodbridge's plantation."

"I take the bet."

The rays of the rising sun were streaming in through the windows, the music ceased, and the revelers began to take their departure.

It was about 9 o'clock that Virginia Woodbridge was out among her dew covered flowers—none had yet been nipped by frost—when she heard a voice behind her.

"May I beg a boon?"

Turning, she saw a young man dressed in white satin. His coat, trimmed with gold braid, was cut in the fashion that we call "clawhammer," with two long extensions in rear reaching almost to his ankles. From his vest escaped a profusion of ruffled lace. His breeches were tight to the skin and reached only to the knee; his stockings were silk; his shoes were ornamented with enormous silver buckles. In the hollow of his left arm was a gun; from his shoulder were suspended a shot pouch, a powder flask and a game bag. As to head covering, there was none. The figure was bowing low before her with his right hand on his heart.

The first idea Miss Woodbridge had of this singular apparition was that he was supernatural; the next, that she was confronted by a lunatic.

"I have called," said the visitor, "to ask your kind permission to shoot a few birds on your plantation."

It occurred to the lady that to refuse the man would be tantamount to an invitation to shoot her. No man in his senses would go hunting in such costume, and, although this poor demented creature looked harmless enough, it was impossible to say that a refusal would not rouse him.

"Certainly," she hurried to say as soon as she could get command of speech. "Hunt all over the plantation."

The lunatic bowed again, thanked her for her kindness and strode away. As for Miss Woodbridge, as soon as his back was turned she darted into the house and locked the door behind her. Then when she was sufficiently recovered she sent for her overseer, told him how by her unconscious mind she had been [illegible] by a lunatic and directed him to send to the insane asylum, a short distance south of her estate, and ask them to send at once and capture the lunatic.

By this time a perpetual "bang" was heard without. A darky rushed in and began to talk with eyes wide opened.

"Missy Glanie, dere's a ha'nt down in de medder killin' all de bobwhite. He dressed like a ghost, all in white, with stars and things on he breast. Wha' all gwine to do?"

"For heaven's sake, don't try to stop him," said the mistress. "If you do he'll kill you."

"Oh, no. I'm not gwine to stop him. As soon as I sor him I run like de deddil was after me. Every time he shoot, down comes a thousand quail."

"Never mind the quail. I don't care how many he kills if he doesn't kill any one else before we can get rid of him."

At this juncture the housekeeper entered the room and asked what was the matter. When informed of the facts she smiled and said:

"I saw your lunatic go by my window. He's Tom Thursby, that Virginia scapegrace."

"And sane?" asked Miss Woodbridge.

"Perfectly."

"Then why appear here in such costume and ask permission to hunt?"

"I don't know. There was a masquerade ball in the city last night, and not an hour ago I saw some of the masqueraders rolling along in their carriages on their way home. Perhaps Mr. Thursby was one of them and took a fancy to do some shooting."

"But why in such costume?"

"No one knows what Tom Thursby will do. He's singular. But I have heard he is very bright. He'll probably break his neck some day riding across country. He's a terrible man on horseback."

"That would be a pity," said Miss Woodbridge sympathetically—"he's so handsome."

Whether the lady meant that it did not matter if homely men broke their necks is not of importance to this story. The order to send to the asylum was countermanded, and Mr. Thursby was permitted to bang away till mid day, when he came to the house with a bagful of quail and asked to see the mistress. She met him, vainly endeavoring to suppress a smile.

"I have only killed these birds," he said, "for the pleasure of the hunt. I leave them for their rightful owner."

"You are Mr. Thursby, I believe, from Virginia."

"I am, and at your service." A low bow.

"That you may not think we Tennesseans less hospitable than the people of the Old Dominion I will ask you to remain to a dinner on the birds you have shot."

"That will certainly be an honor as well as a pleasure." Another bow.

Miss Woodbridge entertained Mr. Thursby till the quails were cooked and the repast was announced. Then she took his arm, and they went into the dining room. Never a smile crossed Mr. Thursby's face. His hostess said nothing about having mistaken him for a lunatic, and he made no reference to his fantastic dress.

The servants on the plantation either had not heard the explanation as to the guest's habiliments, or, if they had, it made little impression on them. The opinion among them gained ground that he was a ha'nt, though many of them declared that he was a lunatic. The braver of the colored children flattened their noses against the dining room window panes to observe the specter. Aunt Eunice, who had been Virginia Woodbridge's "mammy," was very much disturbed.

"Wha' fo' yo' niggers let yo' mist'ess alone wid dat lunaticker fo'?" she asked the men. "Yo' gwine let him shoot her?"

At this white headed Uncle Peter went off and returned with his gun and said he was "gwine to kiver de ha'nt." Miss Woodbridge, while dissecting a quail, discovered him standing in the doorway leveling a shotgun at her guest.

"For heaven's sake, Uncle Peter, what are you going to do? Don't shoot!"

"I see yo' bodder, Missy Glanie. I got de drop on him."

"Oh, that's nothing," said Thursby. "I've seen him for some time. It hasn't spoiled my appetite."

And he helped himself to another quail.

Uncle Peter was finally persuaded to go away with his gun, and the meal proceeded. Then when it was finished Miss Woodbridge and her singular guest spent some time together in the drawing room, after which the guest departed.

Miss Woodbridge was so well pleased with Mr Thursby that she deeply regretted he was so freaky. But when the next day she received from him several dozen pairs of gloves, with a letter stating that her leniency with him had enabled him to win a bet that he would shoot with her permission on her plantation, she did not consider him so freaky after all. Indeed, she considered him very clever.

After this Mr. Thursby continued his mad pranks at horsemanship and other feats, devoted himself to Miss Woodbridge and practiced law. His associates were divided as to whether he were really crack brained or very clever till he won an important suit by an expedient similar to the one by which he had won permission to shoot on the Woodbridge premises. From that time forward all agreed that if he were mad there was a lot of method in his madness.

This impression continued to grow till it was confirmed by the people of Mr. Thursby's section that they had better send him to represent them in Washington, and he was elected to congress. He took Miss Woodbridge with him.

Boiling Milk.

A pinch of soda stirred in milk when it is on the boiling point will keep it from curdling.

VALUE OF ENSILAGE.

When Compared With Other Roughage It Is Far Superior.

After a number of experiments at the Nebraska Agricultural college the feeding value of corn ensilage was found to be far superior to any other roughage. This should convince the farmer that a silo on the farm will tend to improve it wonderfully. The experiment shows that—

One ton of ensilage equals one ton sugar beets.

Three tons of ensilage equal one ton clover hay.

Three and one-half tons of ensilage equal one ton alfalfa hay.

Two and one-fourth tons of ensilage equal one ton marsh hay.

Three and one-half tons of ensilage equal one ton prairie hay.

One-half ton of ensilage equals one ton pumpkins.

Below he gives his estimate of the cost of putting up ensilage and hay and the number of cubic feet occupied by each:

One ton of ensilage cost to put up 63 cents. One ton of hay cost to put up $3.50. One ton of ensilage occupies 50 cubic feet. One ton of hay occupies 500 cubic feet.

To this statement he adds the following:

It will be seen that ten times more space is required for hay than ensilage, and it is hardly possible to construct even a cheap hay shed, to say nothing of a barn, for the price required to store for same quantity of ensilage. With the ordinary hayloft in a good dairy barn the cost of storage space would be three times that of the silo. The table also gives a comparison between the cost of harvesting corn ensilage as compared with hay. It will be seen that corn ensilage can be put up for almost one-third the cost of hay. These figures do not allow for interest on money invested in machinery or storage. While hay is about three times richer in food elements, it is still an expensive roughage as compared with ensilage.

Until the feeder can find a food equal to corn ensilage for even twice the cost he had better seriously consider the silo. Under present conditions at least one-fourth of all the farmers keeping stock in the corn belt will find the silo an economic equipment. An acre of corn put in the silo is valued at about $55, while the same corn standing in the field and husked in the usual manner is valued at $27. This is accounting for all cost of harvesting. Then an acre in the silo is worth two in the field, or, putting it another way, the silo doubles the value of the corn crop.

How to Pickle Butter.

Cover with strong brine and keep in a cool place. The tub or jar must be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before the butter goes into it. Burn sulphur in a pan and turn the tub or jar over it for half an hour. After it has cooled off it will be ready for the brine. Some butter needs disinfecting as well as the receptacle.

THE DAIRYMAN

Don't turn the calf to the feed trough with cows and steers and expect it to get a proper amount of feed. It will be fought away, while the older stock devour the portion it should have.

Right and Wrong Way to Milk Cow.

There is a right and a wrong way to milk the cow. The wrong way is to let the calf suck. The cow is kept for her milk supply, not to give her best to the ambitious calf. The calf should be separated from the mother.

Value of Cleanliness When Milking.

The milk will have about 23 per cent fewer bacteria in it when the cow is well cleaned and her flanks moistened before milking. To moisten straw bedding before milking eliminates about 100 per cent of the bacteria. A closed pail keeps out about 25 per cent of bacteria.

Give the Cow Pure Water.

Give the cow none but pure water. It is strange that any farmer should allow his milk cattle to drink from a stagnant pond which often has a green scum and is full of bacteria. Such water not only endangers the health of the cow, but also the well being of those who drink the milk.

Separator Not at Fault.

Some farmers have pails of milk setting around on the frozen ground or lying them up some place while they do the "chores" and then "cuss" the cream separator and its maker because the machine cannot separate as much cream from cold as warm milk. Milk should be separated as near animal heat as possible.

FRANK COWARD
Treasurer Michigan State Grange.

At the meeting of Pomona Thursday it was decided to again make an exhibit at Traverse City at the meeting of the State grange next winter, everybody believing that the benefit which Charlevoix county received from the exhibit last winter could not be measured in dollars and cents. While the credit for the success of the exhibit last winter belongs in a measure to all who took part in the work, Worthy Master Ward and the officers of Pomona and committee from Pomona grange, the lion's share should go to the chairman of that committee, D. S. Payton.

Mr. Payton is an enthusiast in everything he undertakes, and although he had a double duty to perform, being a member of the board of directors of the West Michigan Development Bureau as well as chairman of the exhibit committee, all the energy of his tireless nature was put into making the Charlevoix county exhibit a grand success. In fact it is one of his chief characteristics to always do whatever duty he is called upon to perform, a little better than it was done before, and whoever has charge of the exhibit next year will need the advice and counsel which he can give them, as Grand Traverse, Antrim and Kalkaska have all decided to make a display this year and in order to follow up the good work did by Payton and his associates last year we must dig in this year, and all of us do the very best we can to make the exhibit a success beyond that of last year. In giving this credit where credit is due we speak from experience as we spent many anxious hours with Mr. Payton outlining plans and we say without any fear of successful contradiction that D. S. Payton did more to bring Charlevoix county to the front last year, than any other man in the county.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange will meet again May 5. It is the desire of the Worthy Master that all members should be present.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson grange met in regular session Saturday, April 20, 1910, with an attendance of twenty-seven.

During the business session Brother O. D. Smith was elected Master to take the place of Brother George Todd, who has resigned.

The grange voted to have Willard Warden and Albert Todd repair the floor of hall.

The members voted to increase the valuation on grange hall and sheds from $700 to $1,100.

The lecturer's hour was taken up with a number of songs, readings recitations and instrumental music.

Grange closed in form to meet again in three weeks.

Sanitary Stalls Are Valuable

According to Professor C. A. Acock of the department of agricultural engineering at the University of Wisconsin, the demand for pure milk produced under sanitary conditions is constantly increasing, and in order to produce such milk it is absolutely necessary to have clean and well bred cows and to equip the stable with sanitary stalls in which the cows should be kept.

The wisdom of building such quarters for dairy animals as are easily kept clean has been emphasized recently by the agitation resulting in pure food laws and a public sentiment demanding a higher grade of milk and butter products from dairies. He says that most old stalls are not sanitary, since the ties, stanchions and partitions do not keep the cows clean and comfortable and are inconvenient for feeding, milking and cleaning. There seems to be a prevailing impression among dairymen that a comfortable, sanitary stall or stanchion is an expensive factory product, the bulletin points out. The fact is that any farmer who is handy with carpenter's tools can build a stall which will secure as good results as any patented stall upon the market. The five points considered in planning the construction of the future types of sanitary stalls are cleanliness, comfort, convenience, cheapness and security. The nearest approach to a perfect stall of any, says Professor Acock, is the "model" stall shown in the illustration.

It is so constructed as to force the cow to stand with her hind feet between a movable crossbar and the gutter, so that the stall is not fouled. The bar and the chain fastening compel her to step forward when she wants to lie down, so that she is kept clean. The position in which the hayrack is hung, too, makes it necessary for the cow to stand back while eating. Hay is put into the rack from the front, and the door which holds grain and water are given opens upward.

A feature of the stall which is well worth the cost of construction is the erection of the partitions in a manner that makes it practically impossible for a cow to step upon the udder or teat of the one lying next to her. The wooden mat over the concrete floor is removable for cleaning purposes. Where it seems desirable the manger may be of concrete, like the floor, and where new stalls are under construction the mangers and floor should be made at the same time.

SMALL HOG HOUSES.

They Are a Means of Keeping the Pigs Healthy Until Ready For Market.

Since individual farrowing houses have come into use and proved a great boon to swine breeders it has been discovered that these same houses are admirably adapted to sheltering hogs the year around. There is no time of the year when they need to be empty. The average litter farrowed in a small house finds sufficient room in it for shelter until ready for market. A house 6 by 6 feet will accommodate six hogs of 225 pounds weight, and ten hogs of that size will easily occupy a house 6 by 8 feet.

THE SMALL HOG HOUSE.
[From Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.]

A drove of 100 hogs that is forced at night to split up into small groups to sleep is practically insured against colds and pneumonia. None of them can get steaming hot, and there are none that must always take the airy outside of the pig pile of hogs in a great high shed, where the whole drove might congregate.

As a thing of perennial usefulness the small house has established itself with a security that never would have been possible if it were required only at farrowing time, because in these days of expensive lumber no man is willing to maintain any buildings that do not seem absolutely necessary. A number of small hog houses might cost more money than one large shed having the same aggregate floor space, but when it comes to a choice of one or the other the pig saving possibilities of the small house commend it to favor.

Water For the Flock.

Many flockmasters formerly believed that sheep required no drinking water. Were you to ask some of these old timers why they did not provide water for their flocks they would answer, "The sheep get dew in summer and snow in winter." These are really not sufficient to quench the thirst.

Sheep troubled with internal parasites drink large quantities of water. Upon hot, dry days an average sized mature sheep will drink a gallon of water, provided the water is pure. The flock should never be forced to drink stagnant, slough water, for they are liable to take the dreaded fluke into their system from this source. Water standing in small pools exposed to the sun will soon become coated with a green scum which seems to cause scours. Water containing an excess of lime should not be given to rams, as such water is very liable to cause bladder trouble or gallstones. Ewes are almost exempt from this ailment. Soft water is best for the ram flock.

The sun purifies almost everything excepting water. With water it evaporates all the good and leaves the evil. Covered tanks are good where there is but a small drinking space left. Let your sheep tanks be filled by pure well water. Running spring water is ideal for the flock. Pure cool water both winter and summer is a boon and blessing to successful shepherding.

DAIRY NOTES

Skimmilk, which is whole milk minus part of its fat and which costs only half as much as whole milk, furnishes protein about four times as cheaply as beef.

Caring For the Calf.

Keep the newly born calf in the best clean, dry, warm place that you have, and especially avoid getting it chilled if you don't want it to have scours and become stunted.

Using the Separator In Cold Weather.

If the weather is very cold it is well to run a gallon or two of hot water through the separator to warm it up before the milk is poured in. Then the milk will not be chilled.

Do the Milking Regularly.

Have a fixed time for milking and always be punctual. If you are running other farm work never allow it to crowd out your regular milking hour. It will not pay to do so.

Value of Good Cows Well Kept.

With good milking cows, well fed and well kept, milk can be produced at a cost of 65 cents per hundred and butter fat for 16 cents a pound. This is an average for the year round.

Richness of Milk.

There is only one way to measure milk, and that is by the percentage of cream it contains. The big yielding cow may be a robber so far as her feed bill compared with her return goes.

A Valuable Discovery.

Professor Frank H. Snow announces the discovery that a water blanket thirty feet thick covers the reservoir at Reno, Nev. Assuming that a like visible shield protects the Salton sea, it is concluded that this body may lose by evaporation not more than four or five feet yearly, instead of the eight feet hitherto expected.

Visit to Grain and Fruit Exhibition at St. Paul Vivid Description of Journey Over the World Famed Rockies—Enjoying Life in Their New Home in Washington.

S. Bellingham, Wash.

Dear friends:—

We are having just beautiful weather, the trees are leaved out and fruit trees are in blossom and I never saw so many flowers at this time of the year. The rose bushes are all budded and will be in blossom next week. Every lawn here is covered with flowers. We had a fine trip. We left Petoskey at three o'clock Tuesday afternoon and were in St. Paul at eight the next morning. We had to sit up all night and I was a little car sick.

We spent all day at St. Paul and were almost all over the city, visited the grain and fruit exhibit building and signed the visitor's roll book. The fruit was canned and the size of some of it was almost unbelieveable. The grains were pretty and were arranged so artistic. There were thousands of people passing through the depot all the time. We left there at 10:30 that night but we got on the train at nine and went to bed. We stayed in Minneapolis until two o'clock and began crossing the Missouri river the next fore-noon. It was clay colored and full of big cakes of ice and it had went over the banks and flooded the fields for hundreds of acres. The mammoth cakes of ice were piled all along the track and the train just crawled along all day. The telephone lines and poles were all down, houses were standing on end and the fences were all gone.

I do not care for Montana as it is a wild looking country and there were hundreds of acres of ground covered several feet deep with water from flooded rivers. We did not reach the state of Montana until Thursday night as Minnesota is a large state and we went right through the middle. There were lots of nice cities and villages we passed through but still I would hate to live there. We began to ascend the Rockies Thursday afternoon, right after dinner, and I never could begin to tell you of their grandeur. The Rockies were hundreds of feet high and covered with sword fern, cedsi and fir trees. We reached the last bench of the Rockies at ten that night but it was so mooo light that I could see as plain as though in day light. Every thing up there was covered with ice and snow. One thing I noticed about the western towns was the great hustle and hurry, especially the mining towns. Butte, Montana which has the richest mines in the world is a hustling city. I would liked to have stopped there for a while. There are holes in the ground all over the mountains, all around it and even in the city itself. I would not have missed seeing it for a good deal. We went over the Cascades on Saturday, and they appealed to me more than the Rockies, especially the river that we followed all the way through and crossed over a hundred times. I did not mind the tunnels and the longest one was five miles long; there were twenty-two in all, including both ranges of mountains. We passed through the Yacakma Valley Saturday afternoon, and it certainly is a valley as the mountains surrounding it are so high one has to look three times to see the top. The Indian reservation was interesting and they had hundreds of ponies grazing among the tepees. The Indians, at least some of them, were dressed in blankets.

We got to Seattle at seven thirty that night and Will, Maurice and I went up to see the Totum pole which was stolen from the Indians up in Alaska. It is about ninety feet high and is made of about a dozen big faces perfectly hideous and of many colors. They worship these images the same as we do our God.

We got on the train at ten o'clock and went to bed and I never knew when we left Seattle which was eleven thirty, and never knew when we reached Bellingham at four thirty. We got up at six and after dressing and taking a bath we took the car over to my sisters and they were just getting up. They had been looking for us for two days. I never shall regret the money we paid out for the trip as it was well worth every cent we paid out to cross the Rockies and Cascades.

We rented a house on Tuesday and went right to housekeeping. This part of the city is built on the side of a big mountain and this side is as large as Petoskey. The main part of it is three miles from here and on level ground, but on the hill where we live it is healthier and the view is grand. Mt. Baker and Chuck-a-mit are right back of us, in front the Puget Sound with islands of big mountains, at one side in the distance, on a clear day, can be seen the Olympia mountains snow capped, and on the other side are the Cascades and we can see the mountains in Vancouver Islands. My sister, brother, Will and I were over to Blaine last Thursday, got up in the morning and took the four o'clock train and got there at five and stayed until five. We came home but the boys went fishing and got lost in the swamp and did not find their way out in time to take the five thirty train, so they came home the next day with a fine mess of brook trout from Campbell creek in Canada. I am going to Vancouver some day this summer. The house we live in is built on the side of the hill and the front door is up stairs and opens on the street. We have a nice yard down stairs, and lots of flowers and roses, several fruit trees and a small garden. We sleep downstairs and live upstairs. At the back door there are 26 steps, but we do our washing down stairs in a dandy big wash room.

I have been to hear Billy Sunday, the great Evangelist, preach at a Tabernacle that will hold 15,000 people and is packed twice every day and has a choir of five hundred. He is pretty good but uses pretty strong language. I have been twice to the Methodist church and met some very nice people. Was invited to a greco tea given by the Ladies' Aid, went and had a good time. The Baptist minister lives across the street and a doctor on the corner. There are lovely homes here and a big hospital on this side and three big schools. We were down and dug some clams last week when the tide was out, and there were such a lot of star fish some were pink and some were purple and as big as a dish pan.

I missed getting the paper for the first week in April and we are so anxious to hear from back there.

I have been out on Lake Whatcom. It is a lovely place and the falls and river are grand. Have also been to Lake Padden. Went to the end of the car line and walked two miles to the lake, it is all up hill and the fresh water lake is at the top. The water supply comes from there. We walked all the way back which is over three miles. Well I must stop and get supper.

PLANS OF BUREAU

Told By Secretary Gibson at Petoskey Banquet

Twenty-Thousand Dollars to be Spent in Advertising Campaign.

John I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, was one of the orators at the annual banquet of the Petoskey and Emmet county Improvement Association held at Petoskey April 25. As regards the plans of the Bureau Mr. Gibson spoke as follows:

"We have secured three hundred square feet more of floor space than we had last year in the Coliseum for the Land and Irrigation Exposition, to be held in Chicago next November and have already begun to plan to make a bigger and better display than we did one year ago. We have been reliably informed that the Western fruit growers are going to make a great effort to regain their lost laurels, especially in the show of canned goods. If we can only have the hearty co-operation of our people, which we confidentially expect, we have no fear of being out-classed. On the other hand we know we can add greatly to the glory and reputation of Western Michigan, and help in no small degree to make our slogan "A Farmer for Every Forty," come true.

"We will continue to devote special attention to our Home Missionary work by supplying live matter to the 116 newspapers of the district, by the publication of our publicity bulletin, by giving expert instructions in horticulture, by personal visits of the secretary, and by all other effective means at our command.

We hope shortly to be able to publish an illustrated monthly magazine, devoted entirely to the propaganda of "A Farmer for Every Forty" in Western Michigan. We will do all in our power to encourage co-operation and the forming of local fruit growers associations and to assist these associations in making creditable local exhibitions of their products.

We have been collecting suitable photographs from all of the counties in the district from which to make colored slides to be used in connection with an illustrated lecture tour, telling about the advantages of Western Michigan, through Southern Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and parts of Illinois and Wisconsin, this coming fall and winter.

We expect to spend in all approximately $20,000.00 this year in an advertising campaign in the interests of Western Michigan.

Every one of the twenty counties in good standing with the Bureau will reap the benefits of the cumulative effects of this extensive advertising effort, and will benefit directly by all the work we do.

WHAT IS NOW EXEMPT

Just What Old Soldiers Can Expect From the New Law.

For more than a year there has been considerable discussion and agitation of the question brought up by the passage of a bill in the last legislature by which the soldiers and sailors and their widows are to be exempt from payment of taxes on homestead property. The following interpretation of the law has been announced by the state's attorney general:

A homestead held by joint deed of the soldier or sailor and his wife, if not valued at more than $1,200 is exempt.

A homestead held under life lease valued at $1,200 or under is exempt.

A homestead held solely by the wife of the soldier or sailor is not exempt, no matter what the value.

If a soldier or sailor owns property the total value of which is more than $1,200, the homestead is not exempt.

If a soldier or sailor or his widow owns property in two or more parcels, such as a farm and a village or city homestead, valued at $1,200 or less is exempt.

If a soldier or sailor owns a homestead valued at $1,000 or less, and his wife owns other property, no matter what the value, the homestead is exempt.

If a soldier or sailor or his widow has a homestead which he is buying on contract, and the property is assessed in his name, it is exempt if valued at $1,200 or under.

THEATRICAL

At the Majestic.

The Tom Marks Company closed its week's engagement at the Majestic theater last Saturday night with a capacity house. Monday the theater was opened to vaudeville. Wallie Campbell came to us and opened this theater on April 4th, at that time stating he would give the people good shows and believe he is keeping his word. Monday night the team that was to play the fore part of the week played one show and then "Wallie," without a falter informed the team they were not the standard and canceled the act, proving he only wants the people who deliver the goods. Wallie will never darken the house on these occasions but will introduce a motion picture show and illustrated song. Commencing with Thursday evening the Washburn Sisters will present one of the cleverest acts Charlevoix has ever seen.

"The Quality of Mercy."

Theatrical devotees should not fail to see the great pastoral drama, "The Quality of Mercy," which will be presented under the personal direction of Mr. Edmund E. Kreyer who appears in the leading role. The K. & A. Amusement Co., whose productions ever have the sine qui non of success stamped upon them assures the theatrical devotee of a pleasant evening.

Miss Caroline DeVere who assumes the part of "Anna Shaw" in "The Quality of Mercy," has often been called one of the strongest emotional actresses on the American stage. Her work in this play is distinguished by its finesse and nearness to nature. The exquisite subtlety of her acting lifts the character from the glare of the footlights and enshrouds it with a genuiness which makes it seem a living, breathing creature who is really living her life before the audience. "The Quality of Mercy," is the next attraction at Charlevoix theater on Friday, evening, May 6. Tickets on sale at Chapel's drug store.

NEXT GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

Has Made Good in Everything Undertaken

EDITOR, PUBLIC OFFICIAL, TRAVELLER

Such Has Been the Record of Chase S. Osborn

Has Visited Every Known Portion of the Globe—An Orator of Convincing Ability Who Does Things.

Hon. Chase S. Osborn, candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Michigan, was born in Huntington county, Indiana, January 22, 1860. Mr. Osborn comes from good stock, his grandfather, John Osborn, being a doctor and a chaplain in the continental army from 1776 to 1780. Chase S. Osborn started his education in a little red school-house, and from ten to fourteen years of age attending the public schools of Lafayette, Ind. He took a three-year course in Purdue University of that city. His first business venture was picking up old bones, rags and iron, which he sold to junk dealers. During his vacations, while attending the public schools, he learned to set type, so he found a job in a newspaper office, setting type and furnishing the motive power for the press on Saturday nights at two dollars per week. He also peddled papers and at one time controlled the sale of the Chicago papers in Lafayette.

At sixteen he went to Chicago, filled with the idea that in that city he would make his fortune. After hunting about for a time he found work as a bell boy in a hotel and so earned enough money to return home. Upon leaving the university he again went to Chicago and succeeded in finding a position as reporter on the Chicago Tribune, but shortly afterwards went home to see his sister married and lost his place. He hung around in Chicago for about a month, and finally went to Milwaukee, looking for another position. His money was exhausted, and at last he was compelled to go to work as a roustabout in the lumber yards of Durr & Kugee, unloading and piling lumber. He didn't like the job, but as it was a case of pile lumber, beg or starve, he piled lumber. Later he secured a place with the Evening Signal of Milwaukee, and later with the Milwaukee Chronicle. For the next year he did general assignment work on the Evening Wisconsin, and for the following two years was city editor of the Sentinel. Purchasing a paper in Florence, Wisconsin, he started in on his own account, publishing this paper for four years, and selling out in the spring of 1877. In the fall of that year he bought the Sault Ste. Marie News. He was state game and fish warden from February, 1895, until January 1899, and was appointed state railroad commissioner in January, 1899.

On his retirement from the office of state railroad commissioner he devoted his time to newspaper work and to travel. At the present time he is one of the regents of the University of Michigan.

Mr. Osborn is a Mason, having taken thirty two degrees. He is a Knight Templar and is also a member of the Knight of Pythias, and Elk and an Odd Fellow. He has visited every European country, has visited the Eskimos inside the Arctic Circle, where his only means of conveyance was by sleds, drawn by either dogs or reindeer. He has visited the land of the midnight sun in Norway, has made several trips to Alaska, has hunted moose in the Hudson Bay wilderness, has visited Australia, New Zealand and the Orient, and few men in the United States possesses as thorough a knowledge of the different South American countries as he. He is the author of a work on South America which is said to have been one of the most valuable descriptive works of the South American continent ever written.

Mr. Osborn is quick and impulsive and is a fluent and eloquent speaker. It is impossible to listen to him without being impressed with his honesty, with his sincerity and earnestness and with the characteristic force with which he punctuates his sentences. Though a rapid talker, his thoughts come even faster than his words.

Breeding Stock For Market Value

In this period of extremely high prices for feed it becomes a leading question with the stockman as to whether or not he can afford to make a specialty of feeding stock for the market. Many think not. Probably no one factor is of greater importance than the character of the animals to be fed, whether horses, cattle, sheep or swine.

Feeding experiments on animals for meat production have generally shown that the breed does not play so important a part in absolute gain in weight as might be supposed. For example, Holstein and Shorthorn steers fed side by side with the same food might make much the same relative gains in live weight.

Animals of common or native stock were among the poorest in average daily gain in live weight. That is the case, as might logically be supposed, though it is not invariably so. Cattle of small size of dairy type will at best make a poor showing in flesh production.

Another and most important side to this question in feeding breeding and feeding is the character of the meat derived from the animal. On the market a steer with plenty of Aberdeen-Angus, Shorthorn or Hereford blood, with good conformation, fetches the highest price. That is because much of his fat is distributed on the outside of the ribs and on the back and fleshy parts, while the native or dairy type of steer has his deposited internally with a much greater percentage of waste. The butcher finds a thicker, finer fleshed cut of meat with the animal of beef bred lines than of the other sort.

In general the preceding statement has equal application for sheep and swine. It is true that in this country range sheep with considerable Merino blood will give essentially equally good gains for the food consumed as will some of our well known pure breds.

If the above statements are correct, and they are, as based on much experimental evidence, then it is largely a question of type or function that the feeder must consider. How is he to get the right sort of animals to secure the best returns? He may buy feeders in the big stockyards, and the better they are the more purity of blood they will show, and if well fed the higher the price they will bring when turned off fat. The butcher knows at once that a well fattened, typy, highly bred Aberdeen-Angus steer or Southdown wether or Berkshire barrow will kill out among the best. It is absolutely a case where blood will tell.

It is a singular thing that so many people will persist in keeping low grade, unprofitable stock even under the best of circumstances. The results of careful study of many dairy herds in this country have shown a large number of cows that did not make enough milk each year to pay for their keep. They were boarding at the expense of their owners.

We need to make a more careful inventory of stock, to weed out the unprofitable ones and buy or breed a type that represents a profit maker of high class. Not one should escape study his own herd, but it will pay him to investigate the matter and get clear in his mind the type that is rendering a profit and clear of it. What Am I

A February blizzard was doing its best to make it disagreeable outside. Therefore going to school was out of the question for Jean, who had a sore throat, or for Jack who had kept his mother up half the night with a bad cough. Two little people with woe-begone faces flitted wandered upstairs and downstairs, and from parlor to kitchen, in a vain attempt to entertain themselves. The appearance of Aunt Elizabeth, rosy-cheeked and bright eyed, brought the smiles and dimples back to the faces of the twins.

"I've come to spend the whole day with you," she announced in her merry voice.

"Now we'll have some fun," whispered Jean to Jack.

The fun began as soon as Aunt Elizabeth was seated cozily before the grate fire, crochet work in hand. "What shall we play?" she asked.

"Make up some new plays out of your own head auntie," said Jean "We're tired of all the old ones."

Aunt Elizabeth wrinkled her pretty forehead, as if she were thinking very hard. Suddenly she said: "Let's make a temperance game and call it 'What Am I?' Keep all your wits about you and try to remember all you have learned at the Loyal Temperance Legion. I'll start the game."

"When I started in life I was very pretty to look at and very sweet to smell and very good and wholesome to eat, for I had in me all the bottled up sunshine of a summer. Then some bad men came and picked me and did a great many disagreeable things to me. They mashed me and gashed me, and squeezed me and finally what was left of me they put into dirty, ill-smelling kegs and barrels and bottels, and sold me from a place with a bad name. By that time I had so changed my nature that no one of my friends of former days would ever have recognized me, for instead of looking pretty and smelling sweet and being good to eat, I was very ugly and bad smelling and very, very dangerous for anyone to put into his stomach, for I made people sick in their bodies and in their minds and in their very souls. What am I?"

"I guess I know," said Jean, "for when you were nice and pretty I saw you growing in among your green leaves out on the farm near Grandpa's and after you was spoiled and bottled up I saw you in the windows of the saloon that mother makes me hurry past on the way from school."

Just then Uncle Sam came to and Aunt Elizabeth said he must tell a "What am I?"

"There are so many of me," began Uncle Sam, "that if you were to put me in a row, it would make a double line all the way from Chicago to New York. It is my business to fill the poor houses and insane asylums and hospitals and jails and penitentiaries, and I do all that as well as many more things to make people miserable, and yet, strange to say, lawyers and cities all over our land get me special permission to do that business it pays only pay me a few dollars a year. What am I?

Decline of the Sailing Vessel.

The rapid elimination of the sailing vessel is shown by statistics recently given by a German paper. In the twenty years between 1888 and 1908 the percentage of sailing vessels has declined in the merchant marine of Great Britain from 61.1 to 12.6; of Germany, from 62.1 to 19.1, of the United States from 80.7 to 30.9. In the merchant marine of France, however, but little change has occurred the respective percentages being 47.2 and 47.2.

JAMES, THE UNRULY.

A St. Patrick's Day Episode Which Developed a "Cupid."

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"James Mullin, you may remain after school," said Miss Degan, polishing a long ruler at the freckled faced boy.

Jimmy smiled scornfully and threw another paper wad at the back of his bitterest foe and settled down in his seat.

"Get your hat and coat, James. I am going to take you to your father. Perhaps you will explain to him why you cannot obey me."

When Anna Degan reached Mr. Mullin's office she confronted a tall, handsome man with black eyes much like Jimmy's own, who looked down upon the two visitors with a friendly smile.

"Sit down," he said, bringing forward a chair.

"I am James' teacher—Miss Degan," she began primly. "James is so unruly, Mr. Mullin, that I have brought him with me today to say that unless your influence can be brought to bear upon him or that you can assure me of his future good behavior I very much fear that Mr. Broadman will expel him."

Mr. Mullin's fine eyes widened with unconcealed surprise. "Well, really," he said after a little pause, "it's hardly my place, you see, to be responsible for Jimmy's behavior."

Anna arose with sparkling eyes and cheeks flushed with indignation. "Oh, do not say that, Mr. Mullin! How can you, a father, repudiate any responsibility for your son's conduct?

Mr. Mullin seemed to find unusual interest in the lovely face framed in its mist of dusky hair. He seemed reluctant to terminate the interview by any definite answer.

"Then you refuse to interfere, Mr. Mullin?"—Miss Degan's voice was haughty now, and her red lip curled with contempt. "As a father"— she paused suggestively.

Mr. Mullin seemed to awaken to new life. "As a father," he said vaguely—

HE HAD ANOTHER MAN WITH HIM THIS TIME.

"as a father"— He stopped abruptly and shot a fleree glance at Jimmy edging toward the outer door. Then he went on with a return of the friendly smile with which he had greeted her: "I believe you will have no further trouble with Jimmy, Miss Degan. I will take him in hand. He shall not cause you any more trouble. I am sorry he has distressed you. It must be rather a task to keep these young imps in order."

From his tall height he looked down on her in such genial good nature that Anna Degan found herself liking Alderman Mullin very much indeed. "Thank you so much, Mr. Mullin," she said gratefully. "I was afraid to come to you at first because"— She paused in embarrassment and turned to the door.

Mr. Mullin's eyes twinkled. "Alderman Mullin's bark is worse than his bite," he said dryly as he opened the outer door and accompanied her to the elevator.

At the farther end of the corridor James, the unruly, was engaged in a silent, furious wrestling match with the office boy. At Mr. Mullin's sharp whistle they disentangled themselves and approached.

It was then that Mr. Mullin gripped one of Jimmy's generous ears and led him, walking stiffly, into the inner office and closed the door.

In the long ride uptown Anna Degan tried to forget the interview with Alderman Mullin. It had turned out much better than she had expected, and yet there had seemed an instant when he was about to refuse to take any part in the discipline of his own and only son. She had been surprised to find the father of James such a young and amiable looking man. She had heard such stories of his fiery, dominant nature she had hesitated to bring a complaint before him. She had feared for the boy—Jimmy had always spoken in tones of almost terror of his father—and yet—

She gave up the problem and tried to think of the pleasure that awaited her that evening. It was the 17th of March—St. Patrick's day—and she was going to the big ball of the Loyal Emerald Knights. Mr. Mullin had worn a sprig of shamrock in the lapel of his well fitting coat. Anna blushed redly and remembered with a certain fierce exultation the day that Jimmy's mother, "Mrs. Alderman Mullin," had visited the school. The recollection of her rubicund face and good natured and voluble flow of conversation quite drove away the picture of Jimmy's good looking father. After that she thought of nothing save the ball.

The orchestra was playing "The Kerry Dance" when Anna entered the ballroom with her sister and brother-in-law, and her little foot beat time to the swinging measure with anticipated delight.

Her gown was a triumph of tender love for the mother country and affection and loyalty to the new republic that had opened its arms to her people. Anna had planned it weeks before, and her skillful fingers had made it—green silk gauze embroidered with little golden harps, folds of white chiffon inside the low cut bodice, and inside the chiffon against her snowy neck three folds of chiffon—red, white, and blue.

The entrancing music of old Irish melodies, the polished floor crowded with brilliant gowns and the handsome uniforms of the Emerald Knights, the eager spectators in the gallery overhead, all formed a beautiful picture that Anna Degan never forgot.

She danced again and again with old friends and new ones whom her brother-in-law, Larry Fane, brought up to her. As she sat resting, her face aglow with exercise and pleasure, Larry approached with a large red faced man, black of brow and with scowling black eyes. His smile was pleasant, however, and seemed to indicate that the scowl was but a bad habit.

Anna's heart seemed to stand still when Larry spoke. "Anna, let me introduce Mr. Mullin—Mr. Alderman Mullin of the Seventh ward."

Then Larry disappeared, and Anna found herself permitting Mr. Mullin to scrawl his name against the next vacant space on her dance card, which proved to be the one she was sitting out, and so presently she was whirling about in the stiff embrace of Mr. Alderman Mullin, who growled a few sentences above her head, stepped on her pretty green shod toes without apologizing and finally left her breathlessly sitting on a divan in a corner, far distant from her little group of friends.

She was glad of the respite to think over the startling situation. If this gentleman was Alderman Mullin, the father of James, the unruly, who, then, was the gentleman who had impersonated the alderman and made himself responsible for the behavior of James?

Across the room a couple revolved stiffly in the gyrations of a waltz; Anna recognized the burly form of the now familiar Mr. Mullin and also that of the lady she had known as Jimmy's mother. As for the other man—her face grew hot with indignation, and she looked lovelier than ever when Larry found her out. He had another man with him this time.

"Mr. Alderman Mullin's cousin, sister—another Mullin and a gentle knight—a good friend of my own! George, my sister, Miss Degan!"

Larry left the two facing each other in the quiet corner, the man, resplendent in green and white satin and gold, looking tenderly down on the young girl in green and gold.

Miss Degan looked him squarely in the face and with contemptuous shrug turned away, but he caught her little gloved hand in his own with a swift gesture.

"Wait, please," he said gravely, and Miss Degan waited for his explanation. It came after a little while, haltingly, as from a man who is not accustomed to explain his actions:

"When a little lad is afraid of his father, Miss Degan, he naturally turns to some man whom he knows is fond of him and will stand by him in trouble. Jimmy confessed to me this afternoon that he was afraid to take you to his father—his father would thrash him, and that is all the good it would do! So the lad brought you to me and trusted me to understand the situation and to stand by him. I didn't get on to his little game till after you went, though I understood from his looks he was in trouble, so I let it go, hoping to see you again and explain matters to you. I had a talk with Jimmy, and he's going to be good. In fact, I've told him I shall call at the school every week and find out what his deportment is. I hope you do not mind, Miss Degan."

Anna listened to the long speech with downcast eyes and trembling lips. She was glad that she had spared Jimmy a whipping from his stern father and that this kind hearted cousin had masqueraded before her as Jimmy's parent. He had a good face, and, after all, Jimmy would improve and room No. 12 might be a credit to the grade after all!

She smiled gratefully up at Mr. George Mullin and dashed a tear from the corner of her eye. "I am very glad you did not disillusion me. I was so tired and cross just then I might have taken Jimmy down to his father's office, wherever it is."

"He'll be a good boy after this," promised Jimmy's big cousin as they glided into a waltz. Sweetly, alluringly, came the strains of "Kathleen Mavourneen," and they did not speak again until it was over. After a little while Mullin asked softly:

"And I may come to the school once a week and look at Jimmy's report, Miss Degan?"

Anna's fingers touched the little golden harps on her pretty fan, and they seemed to give forth strange, sweet music—happy music that fell in cadence with his deep, melodious voice:

"Yes, come," she said demurely. "I think it is a very good idea."

Jimmy Mullin never could understand why, after that, his cousin, George Mullin, always called him "Cupid."

The Republican banquet held at Mancelona was one of the best ever held. Tables were spread in the auditorium of the county normal building where covers were laid for two hundred, and the service was in the hands of the ladies of the church, who furnished an elaborate menu which was beautifully served. The three Gubernatorial candidates, Chase Osborne, Pat Kelly and Amos Musselman, and land commissioner Huntley Russel were honored guests and responded to toasts. Andrew Dougherty as toastmaster introduced the speakers in a happy manner which went far toward putting them in a felicitous frame of mind at the outset which resulted in one of the most delightful political social gatherings ever held in the county. The Elk Rapids Pythian Quartette added immensely to the pleasure of the evening by singing several of their prize winning songs and made a hit every time. A mandolin club furnished music during the banquet. J. M. Townsend of Mancelona was elected president for the ensuing year, Jas. Deevy of Bellaire, secretary and H. S. Amerson of Elk Rapids, treasurer.

That statewide prohibition is the only remedy for the saloon evil is the sense of the meeting of delegates from forty-seven counties of Michigan held in Lansing last week. The delegates represented dry forces throughout the whole state.

The matter of statewide prohibition, however will not be put to a vote next spring as resolutions to that effect was defeated after a hot debate. Other resolutions were passed declaring for further education and the spreading of the conditions in dry counties; commending the work of the State Anti-Saloon league; that of the various sub-organizations; the local option press and others engaged in furthering the temperance cause.

It was the sense of a resolution passed that the campaign just closed had been successful both in results and education.

The opinion of the attorney general was condemned concerning his ruling that saloonists and brewers in dry counties might retain their stocks. A resolution was passed declaring that a test case be made of this point and if the courts ruled with the attorney general, then the legislature be asked to amend the law so that a complete inventory be taken of such stocks and that the stocks be officially sealed.

A resolution also was passed asking the legislature to amend the law so that surety companies could not provide the bond of saloonkeepers.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

Their Unceasing Work Keeps us Strong and Healthy.

All of the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. When healthy they remove about 500 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some part of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms—pain in the back, headache nervousness, hot, dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the filters right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. John Chamberlin, Forest St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills an excellent preparation for kidney disorders, in fact, I found them far superior to any other kidney remedy I ever used. My back ached severely and I had pains in my loins, coupled with other symptoms of disordered kidneys.

When Doan's Kidney Pills was brought to my notice, I obtained a box and their use brought me prompt relief from aches and pains. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills at every opportunity."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Another resolution was passed condemning the colonization plan and asking for rigid legislation to prevent fraudulent registration.

In the evening a banquet was held, which was presided over by J. L. Hudson of Detroit. The principal speakers were Perry F. Powers of Cadillac on "The Press," and Jason C. Hammond on "A Dry Capital."

WHEN the people remember the confession of Julius Ceasar Burrows made at Detroit last winter as follows:

"And I want to say to you that the good people of Michigan have Senator Aldrich to thank for his fidelity to the interests of this state. Whenever I have wanted anything for Michigan I always knew where to go to get it, and, he never failed me." The utter hollowness of the claim of his supporters, that with the retirement of Aldrich and Hale Burrows would become a leader becomes apparent. If after a generation of service in Washington he says he can't secure any legislation for his state without the consent of the senator from Rhode Island; that he has always been a follower and never a leader, does any one think for a moment he would suddenly change and develop traits which he never has shown the least traces of? Not for a moment, and we beleive that they will put a young agressive man in the senate who will be alive to the interests of Michigan and will not be lost as Burrows would be now that he will have no one to go to.

THE gubernatorial race seems to have narrowed down to Osborn and Kelly, with Osborn far in the lead While the people like Kelly they dont think he is the man for governor at the present time. They want a man who is used to handling big business enterprises such as the state of Michigan is and who would bring to the public service that kind of ability instead of the ability of a man, who has filled his official positions well—although no better—and of whose business ability no one knows. A man who is not afraid to say, and who the people believe would, back up his words with deeds, that insurgents are needed in the state as well as in the nation. They want Chase S. Osborn and will say so next September.

CONGRESSMAN Dodds is about the only Michigan representative who is not facing opposition this year, a tribute to the good work which he has done during his first term.

COMMON COUNCIL

Council Chambers, May 3, 1910.

The common council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Hampton presiding.

Aldermen present: Paddock, Nordrum, Webster, Geiken and Swinton.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Moved by Ald. Paddock and seconded by Ald. Nordrum, that the street commissioner be instructed to make a deviation in the side walk on the south side of Ainslee street to take care of a certain tree that comes within the sidewalk line. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Paddock and seconded by Ald. Nordrum, that $93.72 be credited to the Electric light and water fund and charged to the general fund, the amount being current used in pumping water for the Fish Hatchery. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Paddock that the druggist bond as presented by A. B. Fleischer with F. S. Blanchard and Albert Bridge as sureties, be accepted and approved. Motion prevailed.

The committee on electric light and water made the following report.

April 30, 1910.

To the Mayor and Council of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan.

Gentlemen—With reference to the disputed bill of the N. L. Produce Company for $99.21 referred to this committee The Electric Light & Water we beg to state that we find as follows: It has long been in dispute; that at some time or other there must have been some agreement whereby the city and this company consented to exchange favors and supplies; that now this agreement is forgotten by the city and the company has since failed, been dissolved, and in our opinion, if action were taken to recover and a judgment obtained it could not be collected. We further believe that such action now would be unwise, unjust and anything but profitable to the city and would recommend that an order be drawn for the amount, on the general fund and transferred to the electric light & water fund to balance the transaction so far as the books of the city show and that in this way the records be cleared and closed.

Respectfully submitted,
W. J. Rachow.
G. C. Geiken.

Moved by Ald. Nordrum and seconded by Ald. Geiken that the report of the electric light and water committee be accepted and approved. Motion prevailed.

The matter of extending electric light wires on State street was referred by the mayor to the committee on electric light and water.

Comrades

Come out! oh, little comrade of the tresses flying free;
Rejoice in air and sunlight that were made for you and me.
To tarry is a folly and to worry is a sin,
Our boat is on the river and the tide comes in.

What roads were ever fairer than the gipsy trails we love,
The mossy rock beneath us and the flying cloud above?
We mock the squirrel's chatter and the calling of the crows,
Our feet are on the mountain and the west wind blows.

The snow-encumbered forest rims a frost-enchanted mere,
The hills are sharp in shadow and the moon is bold and clear;
Your cheek is rich in roses that the touch of winter brings,
The lake is frozen midnight and the bright skate rings.

But when we're done with roving under heaven's mighty dome
A deeper joy is waiting in our bounded realm of home;
The lamplight throws a halo round a sunny little head,
It's cozy by the hearthside when the flame glows red.

BAGGING A BIG TIGER

The Jungle Monarch Was Trapped Lolling In His Bath.

A FEAT OF MARKSMANSHIP.

Only the Brute's Head Showed Above the Water, and the Well Placed Bullet, Fired From an Elephant, Entered the Nostril and Broke His Neck.

An interesting account of a tiger hunt is given by one who had a wide experience in hunting this most dangerous of beasts. Mounted upon elephants, the writer and his companions had been hunting the jungle without making a find until, as they were about to give up the search, a sudden disturbance among the elephants appeared to betoken a tiger near at hand. Giving directions to the others as to the order of marching their elephants, the writer ordered his mahout to turn into the thick feathered foliage to the left in search of a pool of water which he remembered to be there.

There was a slight descent to a long but narrow hollow about fifty or sixty yards wide. This was filled with clear water for an unknown length.

I was just about to make a remark when, instead of speaking, I gently grasped the mahout by the head as I leaned over the howdah and by this signal stopped the elephant.

There was a remarkable sight. About 120 yards distant on my right the head and neck of a large tiger, clean and beautiful, reposed above the surface of the water, while the body was cooling, concealed from view. Here was our friend enjoying his quiet bath, while we had been pounding away up and down the jungles which he had left.

"Fire at him," whispered the mahout, "or you will lose him! He will see us and be off."

"Hold your tongue!" I answered. "He can't see us, for the sun is at our back and is shining in his eyes. See how green they are."

At this moment the tiger quietly rose from his bath and sat up on end like a dog. I never saw such a sight. His head was beautiful, and the eyes shone like two green electric lights as the sun's rays reflected from them, but his huge body was dripping with muddy water, as he had been reclining upon the alluvial bottom.

For quite a minute the tiger sat up in the same position. At last, as if satisfied that he was in safety and seclusion, he once more lay down with only the head and neck exposed above the surface.

"Back the elephant gently, but do not turn around," I whispered. Immediately the elephant backed through the feathery tamarisk without the slightest sound, and we found ourselves outside the jungle. We could breathe freely.

"Go on, now, quite gently till I press your head, then turn to the right, descending through the tamarisk till I again touch your turban.'"

I counted the elephant's paces as she moved softly parallel with the jungle until I felt sure of my distance. A slight pressure upon the mahout's head and the elephant turned to the right. The waving plumes of the dark green tamarisk divided as we gently moved forward, and in another moment we stopped. There was the tiger in the same position, exactly facing me, but now about seventy-five paces distant.

"Keep the elephant quite steady," I whispered, and, sitting down upon the howdah seat, I took a rest with the rifle upon the front bar of the gun rack. A piece of tamarisk kept waving in the wind just in front of the rifle beyond my reach. The mahout leaned forward and gently bent it down. Now all was clear. The tiger's eyes were like green glass. The elephant for a moment stood like stone. I touched the trigger.

There was no response to the loud report of six drams of powder from the "five-seven-seven" rifle, no splash in the unbroken surface of the water. The tiger's head was still there, but in a different attitude, one-half below the surface and only one cheek and one large eye still glittering like an emerald above.

Upon examination it proved that there was no hole whatever in that tiger, the bullet having entered the nostril, broken the neck and run along the body. The animal consequently had never moved.

This tiger when laid out straight, but without being pulled to increase its length, measured exactly nine feet and eight inches from nose to tail.—Youth's Companion.

ISLAND OF SPITZBERGEN.

The World's Attention Attracted to White Land of the North.

A splendidly wild nature in a narrow strip lying between the greatest ice mass of the northern hemisphere and an ocean almost ice free for many months in the year is the home of the Eskimos, the only polar people of the globe. The splendid white skin of the polar bear of Greenland is a highly prized ornament. The skin of the arctic fox is still more so. Less valuable are the reindeer. But since they are found in large herds and their meat is edible they, too, are profitable to the hunter. They and some other kinds of animals were eagerly hunted long after the golden days of the whale hunt had ceased.

Although at present the chase has considerably diminished, the hunt for the arctic fox and the collecting of eiderdown are still continued, while the polar bear and walrus have shared the fate of the whale and except in the extremest north, are rare visitors to the coast. The colonization of Spitzbergen has assumed a new phase. Tourist travel now extends to the remote polar islands. The feeling that one is far removed from all civilization and regions governed by the laws of human society, entirely alone with nature, is fascinating.

There are wonderfully beautiful days with intense blue and white; then during the summer the sun never sets. There are immense flocks of the most varied sea birds, magnificent swarms of eider ducks and reindeer. There are mountain spurs capped with eternal ice and streams of ice projecting far into the ocean. Coal is found in great quantities and is readily accessible from the fiords. Not a few nations are turning their gaze on Spitzbergen, with the result that a diplomatic conference, it is said, will soon be held to decide upon Spitzbergen's future.—John A. Howland in Chicago Tribune.

ROTARY SNOWPLOW.

Improved Machine That Can Make Way Through Heaviest Drifts.

This form of rotary snowplow was developed after many experiments with large models, and the result is a plow capable of excavating its way through almost any depth or condition of snow.

The forward end, or snow fighting part of the plow, is of steel and contains three chambers. The middle chamber is open to the interior of the car, and its front carries the nose of the plow, which projects forward to the end of the apron or shovel. This divides the snow and directs it against the expellers, which are contained by the two side chambers. Each expeller consists of four spiral flanges. Riveted to the flanges are four and one-half inch steel plates or blades twenty-two inches wide, forming a true helix upon the hub. The expellers are revolved at a rapid speed by steam engines connected to them by silent chain drive. When the plow is forced into a drift or cut the snow is caught by the expellers and thrown upward and outward with great force.

The plow was first tried on the Canadian Pacific system with great success. Owing to the solid condition of the snow attacked it could not penetrate the mass at a speed of less than six miles an hour, but the expellers threw out the snow as rapidly as it was received. At a speed of eight miles an hour the plow penetrated forty-five to fifty feet at a time, then withdrew to take another run at the mass. After getting through the heavy drift a stretch varying in depth to five feet was cleaned up at a steady run. Snow banks that had accumulated two months had become so compact that fifty pound blocks thrown out by the expeller could not be broken by an ordinary shovel.—Popular Mechanics.

Tool Hardening by Gas.

The use of the gas furnace for forging, tempering and hardening steel is spreading among the workshops where cutlery and tools are made. The old "hearths" are disappearing, replaced by small, clean gas furnaces, which are not only economical in space and cost of running and comparatively clean and neat, but furnish a uniform temperature of any desired degree, thus avoiding damage to the steel through "burning" or irregularity of temperature. The working of the furnaces is economical because the gas can be cut off the moment the operation is finished.

The Latest Microbe.

Professor Metchnikoff, head of the Pasteur Institute at Paris, has arrived at the conclusion that gastro-enteritis in infants is chiefly due to a microbe christened the "proteus," which is found in fruits and vegetables and in butter and cheese. Mothers, he says, frequently transmit the microbes to children by handling them or their nursing bottles with soiled fingers. Soap is the remedy. Professor Metchnikoff suggests that the hands should always be thoroughly washed before touching food intended for children. Even adults who would escape enteritis should scrape cheese well and plunge fruits and salads into boiling water before eating them.

"Here in the description of Sadie's party one of the reporters whom she asked to be nice to everybody says that Miss Oldgirl formed one of the most prominent social decorations of the occasion."

HIGHWAYS OF BRICK.

Method For Constructing a Road of This Material.

GRADING IMPORTANT FACTOR

For Satisfactory Results the Bed Must Be Entirely Free From Depressions. Proper and Economical Way of Laying the Brick.

In an address before a recent engineering convention in Indiana on the construction of brick highways W. L. Blair said: A brick highway to be entirely satisfactory must be entirely free from depressions, every part conforming to the grade. This result must be anticipated in the preparation of the sand cushion, first spread at the estimated depth of two inches and these depressions avoided by the use of a hand roller weighing from 300 to 400 pounds, additional sand applied, rolled and screeded again at least three times. At the last screeding it will be found that the uncompressed sand will not be over one-quarter inch in depth at any one point.

It is certain also that in ironing out what few depressions remain and compacting the brick into the cushion but very little sand will be pushed into the interstices by the final rolling.

The brick should be dropped in straight lines upon the sand cushion, with the best edge of the brick uppermost. Economy for the contractor would require that the brick be brought to and deposited within reach of the person who actually lays the brick in a way that will accommodate his method of dropping them in place, insuring the best edge uppermost. But previous to dropping the brick in the street attention must be given to the necessary provision for the expansion cushion next to the curb.

The board should be prepared by beveling a joist eight inches in width, the thickness determined largely by the width of the street. Even in a narrow street the expansion cushion should not be less than one inch, one and one-quarter inches for a thirty foot street and one and one-half inches for a width exceeding thirty feet. This board should be placed next to the curb, worked slightly into the sand cushion before the brick are laid and remain until the street is finished in all other respects, after which it should be removed within twenty-four hours following the application of the cement filler.

From Good Roads Magazine, New York.
WELL BUILT BRICK ROADWAY.

After the brick are dropped into the street the surface should be swept, precaution theretofore exercised that no brick go into the street which are dirty, or, after in, that they are not made so by use, as it is impossible for the cement filler to adhere to a dirty surfacing. After the sweeping thorough rolling must take place by the use of a roller not weighing over five tons.

The filler shall be composed of one part each of clean, sharp sand and portland cement. The sand should be dry. The mixture, not exceeding one-third bushel of the sand, together with a like amount of cement, shall be placed in the box and mixed dry until the mass assumes an even and unbroken shade. Then water shall be added, forming a liquid mixture of the consistency of thin cream.

From the time the water is applied until the last drop is removed and floated into the joints of the brick pavement the mixture must be kept in constant motion.

To avoid the possibility of thickening at any point there should be a man with a sprinkling can, the head perforated with small holes, sprinkling the surface ahead of the sweepers.

Within one-half to three-quarters of an hour after this last coat is applied and the grout between the joints has fully subsided and the initial set is taking place the whole surface must be slightly sprinkled and all surplus mixture left on the tops of the brick swept into the joints.

After the joints are thus filled flush with the top of the brick and sufficient time for hardening has elapsed, so that the coating of sand will not absorb any moisture from the cement mixture, one-half inch of sand shall be spread over the whole surface, and in case the work is subjected to a hot summer sun an occasional sprinkling, sufficient to dampen the sand, should be followed for two or three days.

The last steps upon which depend the highest possibilities of the brick street are the proper rolling of the brick after they are in the street and the ironing out of any slight depressions found to exist.

CORN AS FEED FOR HOGS.

Mixed With Meat Meal It Supplies All Protein Necessary For Growth.

The question as to the most economical way of feeding corn to hogs is one that seems to continue to interest a great many people. A prominent swine raiser says: With the experience I have had in feeding corn to hogs it has always seemed to me that if you merely throw a-plenty of good, sound corn to the fattening hogs, if they are of a good breed and healthy, the corn will certainly be put where it will do the most good.

During a recent experiment comparisons were made in feeding dry corn, soaked corn, dry cornmeal, soaked cornmeal, dry corn and cobmeal and soaked corn and cobmeal. Of dry corn it took 476 pounds to make 100 pounds of gain, and the gain was 12.3 pounds per bushel of corn. Of soaked corn it took 513 pounds of corn to make 100 pounds gain, and the gain per bushel was 10.9 pounds. Of dry cornmeal it took 595 pounds to make 100 pounds of gain, and the amount of gain per bushel was 9.4 pounds.

The normal conclusion from these figures is that in fattening hogs feeding dry corn on the ear pays best, so long as only corn is fed. If some meat meal were fed with the grain, especially in the case of young hogs, there might be a more rapid gain, as the large percentage of animal food in the shape of meat meal or tankage supplies all the protein needed to make growth.

It seems that the age of hogs made some slight difference in relative results, though there was no apparent reason for it. For instance large hogs, say over 200 pounds, made more rapid growth on soaked corn and lighter ones made more on dry corn. But soaking twelve hours seemed to do better than a longer time. They probably got too much water in proportion to corn.

Taken altogether, it may be said that dry corn fed on the ear is the best way to feed hogs on corn alone. For rapid growth in young hogs I have found that tankage was of great assistance.

The importance of all points in the production of pork is so great that it is well worth careful studying. Of one thing all pork raisers who have been studying the subject are surely convinced, and that is that where pasture is possible it greatly cheapens the production.

Texture of the Fleece.

Wool substance is what the wool grower is looking for, provided it is not made up of too course fibers, which is not usually the case. Density and fine fibers are usually associated.

A dense fleece may usually be recognized in several ways. A fine, close fleece generally is more oily than a course fibered one. An oily fleece is a dust catcher and usually presents a dark, gummy outer appearance. Secondly, a close fleece separates into small areas when the mass of the fleece is stroked with the hand, while a course fleece presents larger areas when handled in the same manner. Appearance frequently is alone sufficient to distinguish the fluffy, open fleece from the close, dense fleece.

The most satisfactory way of determining density is by grasping a handful of wool as it grows on the sheep. If there is substance to the wool a handful is secured; if substance is lacking the hand will not be full. This test for density can be applied rapidly in a flock and is very satisfactory.

A dense fleece is valuable not alone for the increase in quantity of wool, but for the protection that it affords the animal from the elements and the dust and chaff that fly about in the yards where they are fed.

CHARLEVOIX RETAIL MERCHANT'S BANQUET

Held at Baker's Inn Wednesday Evening

WAS SUCCESSFUL IN EVERYTHING

Boyne City Board of Trade in Attendance

Lieutenant Governor Kelly, Hon. Amos S Musselman, J. E. Converse, Mrs. J. L. Crane and Mayor Hampton Speakers

Perfect in everything, arrangements, service and entertainment was the verdict after the close of the first annual banquet of the Charlevoix Retail Merchants association, held at Baker's Inn, Wednesday night of last week.

Shortly after supper citizens began assembling at the lark hall where for about an hour they greeted the city's distinguished guests in an informal manner, music being furnished by the Charlevoix City band, after which led by the band, an adjournment was taken to Baker's Inn where for another hour the parlors were thronged with Charlevoix business men, and their wives, in greeting to the guests of the evening, Lieutenant-governor Kelly, Hon. Amos S. Musselman and members of the Boyne City Board of Trade, who came over thirty strong to meet their Charlevoix brethren around the banquet board.

To the strains of music furnished by the Charlevoix High School Orchestra the members of the association to the number of one-hundred and forty-six, formed around the tables and enjoyed the banquet, which to say it was at Baker's Inn is all that is necessary, as their reputation as caterers to an affair of the kind cannot be excelled.

After the six course dinner was disposed of the assembly was called to order by J. L. Crane, president of the association, who introduced the toast-master, Lisle Shanahan, who maintained, if he did not excel, his reputation as Charlevoix's premier toastmaster. The first speaker called upon was Mayor Hampton, whose first official welcome was a fitting start to his administration of city affairs.

Mrs. J. L. Crane responded to the toast, "The Women," and set a pace as an after dinner speaker, that even the experienced Kelly could not equal.

J. E. Converse of Boyne City made a plea for a uniting of effort between the sister cities of the county, all to work together for a bigger, better Charlevoix county.

Hon. Amos S. Musselman spoke on "Organization," a topic on which he was thoroughly at home and logically did he enumerate how organization of business men made for good fellowship, destroys jealousy and caused us to look for the good and not the bad traits of our fellowmen.

Hon. Patrick H. Kelly, the last speaker was at his best and after a few minutes of the Irish wit that has made Pat Kelly famous he gave an interesting comparison of the cost of maintaining our state institutions at different periods in its history.

It was after one o'clock before the company broke up for the night, Kelly and Musselman to dream of being governor of Michigan, the Boyne City men to view the comet and reflect how pleasant it was to meet in a fraternal manner with the Charlevoix business men and the citizens of Charlevoix delighted to have the honor to entertain Lieutenant-governor Kelly and Amos Musselman not as candidates for governor, but as a man who has filled many official positions with credit to himself and state and as a business man who well deserves the title of Western Michigan's merchant prince, and with a warmer feeling toward the business men of Boyne City.

OVER MILLION FRUIT TREES

Have Been Set Out In Western Michigan This Season

O. S. PAYTON AND FORD P. ROBBINS

Are Re-elected Directors From Charlevoix County

Enthusiastic Meeting of Bureau Held Wednesday—Headquarters Will Remain in Traverse City.

The annual meeting of the West Michigan Development bureau held at Traverse City, Wednesday, was the largest and most enthusiastic meeting yet held, representatives being present from Pellston, Harbor Springs, Petoskey, Charlevoix, Boyne Falls, Central Lake, Antrim, Kalkaska, South Boardman, Traverse City, Northport, Glen Haven, Frankfort, Cadillac, Manistee, Ludington, Baldwin, Reed City, Evart, Hart, and Grand Rapids.

A statement that was received with interest was made by Secretary Gibson, who stated that he was in receipt of a letter from the Greening nursery man, who stated that he had shipped forty cars of fruit trees into Western Michigan, which were set out in the territory covered by the district. This was estimated to be nearly 1,000,000 trees, and had the nurseries been stocked with all that the demand called for, nearly double this amount would have been set out in Western Michigan.

The question of advertising in the bulletin came up, the price per page being discussed, after which a motion was made and carried to refer the printing matter to the committee on printing.

Secretary Gibson stated that there had been a trend toward education in horticulture, and said that a fruit grower's primer, giving instructions as to the care and culture of fruit from the clearing of the soil to the shipping of fruit, was being arranged, and a fruit train from the agricultural college was to visit the district, under the arrangement of Professor L. R. Taft, superintendent of agriculture.

A letter from Professor Taft was also read in regard to Western Michigan having an exhibit at the state fair, and a motion was made and carried that the bureau offer a premium equal to the one offered by the Northeastern bureau for the best exhibit of fruit at the fair, the county represented to stand the expense.

The following directors were elected, each county being represented by two names, where there was a contest one of the names being withdrawn:

Antrim county—E. A. Fox, Central Lake; Joseph Butler, Elk Rapids.

Benzie county J. W. Cruse, Homer; E. O. Wickham, Frankfort.

Charlevoix county—O. S. Payton, Charlevoix; Ford P. Robbins, Boyne Falls.

Emmet county—E. C. Rust, Pellston; A. L. Duell, Harbor Springs.

"I know," said Jack, "we're going to put you out of our town next election."

"May I tell mine?" asked mother, who had stopped to listen for a minute. "I am only a few inches long and I never went to school; in fact they would never let me into such a nice place as a school unless some bad boy smuggled me in. But for all that I can do some kinds of number work very skillfully. I can add to the boy or man who uses me all sorts of weakness and diseases and pains. I can subtract from anyone who grows fond of me his strength, so that he can't play football or any other manly sports; his health, so that he will always be dwarfed in body; his brains, so that he never will be very bright; and his very character, so that he never can be of much use to himself or to the world. I can multiply his losses and his failures ten times ten, and a hundred times a hundred. I can divide up his wits and his will-power until he can't make any use of them, for he has lost control of them. In a few short years I can make a little insignificant fraction of a man out of a boy who was intended to have a fine, strong body, a well-trained, keen mind, and a generous helpful soul. What am I?"

"Youre something I'm never going to touch when I grow up," said Jack decidedly.

"I can see by Jean's face that she has one to give us," said Uncle Sam.

"It isn't a very hard one to guess," said Jean modestly. "I'm just a little piece of paper, with some words on it like a promise, and somebody's name at the end saying that somebody will never, never have anything to do with the dreadful stuff that Aunt Elizabeth told about. And though just one of me is very little, there's getting to be so many of me, and every year there's getting to be more with the names of little boys and girls and of their mothers and fathers and their uncles and aunties written on me, that some day, pretty soon, there will be enough of me to put a stop to the dreadful business that fills poor-houses and jails. What am I?"

"We all know what you are," cried Jack, "for every one of us has signed one of you. When I get back to school I'm going to get the boys to play the new game, and then end up with Jean's 'What am I?' and hand out a pledge for them to sign after they guess it."

Elephants' Love For Finery.

Strange as it may seem, the elephant is passionately fond of finery and delights to see himself decked out with gorgeous trappings. The native princes of India are very particular in choosing their state elephants and will give fabulous sums for an animal that exactly merits the somewhat fanciful standards they have erected. For these they have made cloths of silk so heavily embroidered with gold that two men are hardly able to lift them.—Pearson's Weekly.

CARING FOR HORSES.

When Conditioning For Spring Feed and Groom Them Well.

An expert horse breeder says when conditioning horses for spring work the right kind of start and the "know how" are required, the same as in doing anything else properly. If the horses have been allowed the run of a stalk field or straw stack they are not in good physical condition to immediately start at heavy work. With such conditions it is necessary to begin at once to restore an animal physically by giving at first a small amount of grain and gradually increasing the amount as he becomes accustomed to it.

It should require at least three weeks to get a horse accustomed to consuming a liberal grain feed. One feed of hay may be given each day to replace the straw or corn stover. It is not well to deprive the horse of his daily exercise, as increased feeding without exercise is likely to cause deranged digestion. For best results exercise is almost as essential as the feed.

The old coat of hair should be shed quickly as possible after cold weather has passed, and this can be hastened by stabling the animal at night with a good dry bed upon which to sleep and grooming, blanketing and feeding a small amount of oilmeal each day.

If the long hair is allowed to remain the horse will perspire freely when at work, which is exhausting, and he is very apt to catch cold.

Some farmers resort to clipping their horses, which is better than leaving the long hair on, but clipping is not desirable as the natural means of removing it. Grooming should not be neglected in either case, since the excretory glands should be kept open.

As the time approaches for the heavy work to begin the horses should be hitched for a short time each day and the amount of work gradually increased as they become hardened. It is necessary to not only harden the muscles of the horse, but to harden the shoulders to the collar as well.

There are a variety of feeds, all of which are well suited to the needs of the horses and will give satisfactory results when judiciously used. Oats and timothy hay is considered a standard feed for working horses.

Timothy is not very palatable. Horses are not likely to gorge themselves with it, and oats, having a large, coarse hulls, are bulky, and as a result they become more thoroughly mixed with saliva during the process of mastication, and when they enter the stomach are more readily acted upon by the digestive juices. Because of this fact a horse is less subject to deranged digestion and colic caused by careless or improper feeding.

Good, pure water is important, and this the horses should have in plentiful supply at all times.

Dried Blood Meal For Pigs and Calves.

Dried blood meal is a very valuable feed for calves. It not only supplies them with an abundance of protein, which is very necessary to all growing animals, but it acts as a regulator of the calf's digestion. It is also a valuable feed for hogs.

Feeding Young Stock.

The best way to fatten young stock to secure a maximum profit is to feed them well from the start. Whether it be young cattle or lambs, they should be liberally fed from the beginning of the feeding period.

THE VETERINARY

Where the hogs are fed large amounts of sloppy food a little baking soda added occasionally will tend to prevent any undue acidity of the stomach.

How to Cure Stringhalt.

Stringhalt spoils a horse for market. To cure a horse of this trouble use some alcohol once per day on his stifle joint and just above it and hand rub well.

For Hard Worked Horses.

One of the best remedies for sore backs and harness galls on horses is two teaspoonfuls of ground white oak bark and two quarts of water. Pour this water (hot) over the bark and let it stand until cool. Then strain and bottle for use. Bathe sores in this solution.

Ridding Cows of Lice.

To rid the cows of lice apply a 1 to 50 solution of coal tar dip two or three times a week and then rub in flowers of sulphur or mix them together. Apply with spray pump and then scrub in with brush. It also will be necessary to cleanse, disinfect and whitewash the stable.

Tetanus In the Horse.

Tetanus (lockjaw) from infection of a wound by the bacillus of the disease is to be suspected, and it will not spread to the other horses. Put the horse affected in a secluded box stall and feed it soft, easily assimilated food in gruels and in time it may recover without the use of medicine.

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

No person who is grappling with the vital perplexities of life can afford to poss this great novel by without reading it. The never ending battle between capital and labor, between duty and pleasure, between man and woman, between mon and man and between purity and vice is here shown by a student of the conditions of which he writes. The story teaches the lesson of hope to struggling mankind. It deals with the socialistic problems of the hour in a sane way, revealing to the rich their mistakes and to the poor their opportunity. Stirring action as well as captivating romance fills its columns and conveys the intended lessons the more effectively.

CHAPTER I.

DAWN IN HAGGLETON'S TENEMENTS.

THE night workers had long since begun their weary tramp home through the darkness in the crowded tenement district of which Market street is the congested center, the most densely populated thoroughfare of New York. The streets were still empty in comparison with what they should be a few hours later, but quiet—never.

At no hour of the day or night is that quarter of the city without its noises. They succeed each other in a regular, daily repeated order. One can tell by them each hour of the twenty-four. And as the street has its noises, so has each house.

An alarm clock rattled in a large room in one of the towering tenements, built of brick, without ornamentation, made hideous by row upon row of narrow windows.

A young woman seated at a table in a corner of a squalid room had not looked up or stopped for a moment in her occupation of gilding plaster figures with a brush which she dipped from time to time in a pan. A lamp, shaded so as to throw all the light it gave directly upon her work, stood beside her. The rest of the room was dark.

A man's sleepy, quarrelsome voice came from somewhere beyond the room.

"What time is it, Jenny?"

"After 7. You'd better get up."

The girl was strikingly handsome in a buxom, sensuous way, but the droop of resignation of her mouth struggled with the line of revolt that met it from the delicate nostrils downward. Her eyes shone dark under the arched eyebrows. In them there were unrest and knowledge of good and evil, a vague wonder and a look of hunger of mind and heart.

The room as she turned around to survey it was seen to contain two iron bedsteads, in one of which there were a man and two children, while the other contained a younger man. Both beds were tousled and untidy. The young man's clothes had been thrown in a heap on the foot of his. The elder man's lay partly on a chair, partly on the floor beside it.

Moran, Jenny's father, sat up in bed. Jenny returned to her work, sitting down with her back toward the beds.

"Can't sleep with that kid coughing and kicking," grumbled Moran. "Didn't sleep a wink."

He slid his feet on to the floor, drew on his shoes, hitched up the trousers in which he had slept, crossed over to the sink and washed his face and hands. Then he turned to a bare table, which, with three cheap, rickety chairs, completed the furniture.

He cut off a hunk of bread and ate, grumbling the while, his watery eyes wandering along the wall, staring unwittingly at the cheap color prints of the rulers of Europe that formed its incongruous ornament.

A large picture of a young man in diving costume, a veritable Hercules, his heavy helmet resting on his arm, occupied a place of honor all by itself on another wall.

Moran had a weak, discouraged face, with incongruously scowling eyes.

The younger man had propped himself up in bed, lighted a candle and was now reading a paper. He was Joe Caffrey, the widower of Jenny's elder sister, who had died three weeks before. Now, like the two children, he was a "boarder" of Jenny's.

"Hello!" said Joe, looking up from his paper. "Here's a description of John J. Haggleton's private yacht. He sails today on a cruise."

"Haggleton!" growled Moran. "That's our landlord. I'd like to have him here!"

Joe Caffrey kept on reading.

"Oh, say, listen to this!" he exclaimed: "The walls are panelled in satinwood; under foot are velvet carpets twelve feet wide, and"—

Moran jumped up in a rage.

"D——d millionaire!" he shouted.

It was broad daylight now. Jenny hits candle. Through the cheap, draggly lace curtains of the windows a superb view of the East river and the Brooklyn bridge was revealed.

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

As Moran opened the door his daughter stopped him.

"I wish you'd stop at Mrs. Blaney's," she said, "and ask her to come around and look at Benny's cough. He might have croup."

"Benny!" snarled Moran. "It's a rotten idea having those kids here, anyway. Why don't they stay with their father?"

"Their father," answered his daughter, practically, going over to the children's bed, "their father pays us $4 a month for their board."

Moran turned to go. But before he closed the door behind him he growled, "This is a h— of a home."

The children, a girl of ten and a boy two years younger, whimpered. Benny coughed again, then wailed. His sister put her arms around him and soothed him.

"Don't cry, you star boarders," called Joe good naturedly. "You are going to have presents, do you hear? Beautiful presents. Santa Claus forgot you at Christmas, but that was a mistake."

The two youngsters sat up in bed and gazed at him with eager expectancy.

"What are you telling them that for?" asked Jenny indignantly.

"Never you mind. Come here, Emmy."

The girl clambered out of bed and went to him in her nightgown. Benny started to follow, but was restrained by Jenny.

"Now, listen," continued Joe. "In a minute, just as soon as I get up, that sympathetic and good looking lady over there, my sister-in-law, is going to lend me $2."

"Not on your life," said the sympathetic and good looking lady with much energy.

"That $2," continued Joe, without paying the slightest attention to her, "I am going to take over to Wallace's pool room and play it on a sure thing—Corn-Cob."

"Corn Cob!" repeated Emmy uncomprehendingly.

"Yes. It's a sure pipe. Why don't you laugh? It's a cinch at 15 to 1. So I'll come back this afternoon with thirty bones."

"Gee! Thirty bones!" The child's eyes shone.

"Of which thirty bones," Joe explained distinctly, watching Jenny, "ten go to the sympathetic and good looking lady, leaving twenty for personal expenses and miscellaneous charities. Ahem!"

Jenny patted Benny's pillow.

"Fifteen to one—a sure thing," repeated Joe impressively.

"Nothin' doin'," said his sister-in-law.

"That means," resumed Joe, again pretending not to hear her and addressing himself to Emmy, "a new doll for you, and—what do you want: Benny?"

"I want a yacht," shrilled the little fellow.

"Ha, ha! He wants a yacht like that millionaire Haggleton! All right, my son; you get a yacht."

Jenny faced him.

"Better cut out pool rooms, Joe, and look for a job."

"I might find one," he shrugged.

Joe, who, like Moran, had slept half dressed, now rose, washed himself hastily and made his simple toilet.

"You hinted at looking for a job, Jenny," he observed, "but that supposes a desire for work, and in me that would mean sweeping reform. Now, reform may suit you, my dear sister-in-law, but"—

"Cut it out," said Jenny sharply. "That's enough."

She blushed painfully and her eyes filled with tears at the thought of her sodden past.

Joe fished in his pocket, pulled out a cigarette, and threw it at her. She caught it deftly, lighted it and inhaled the smoke with keen relish.

"If a girl will be an idiot," continued Joe. "It is all right to keep straight, but why go to extremes?"

She had "reformed," given up finery and ease, but why?

Why had she suddenly returned to poverty, squalor and grinding toil? She was young, handsome; she loved comfort; she hated work.

A gleam of intelligence came into Joe's face.

"I know why you done it," he said suddenly enlightened.

"What do you mean?"

"It wasn't for my poor dead Liz that you reformed; it was for him!"

He pointed at the picture of the diver on the wall.

"Yes, for Phil," she said.

"Yes, for Phil," he repeated.

"You're not such a fool, Joe."

"Oh, that was easy," he returned modestly. "You always have your eyes on that picture. All right," he said. "I'll stand in with you. But we'll have to sidetrack the other maiden."

Jenny burst out:

"The high toned girl at Mrs. Blaney's boarding house?"

"Sure. The trained nurse. Miss Margaret Lawrence. She's the only peach on the tree for Phil."

Jenny clinched her hands.

"She'll never get him! Never!"

A knock at the door caused them both to look toward it.

The knock was repeated. Joe looked at Jenny.

"Come in!" she said.

The door opened, admitting a handsome, stalwart young man of twenty-five or so. His face was tanned by exposure, and he carried his broad shoulders with an air of responsibility that rose to the dignity of authority in his frank, manly, somewhat stern face. It was the original of the diver's picture on the wall—Philip Ames, a man placed above his environment by the arduous training of his work and its ample wage. It showed in the decisiveness of his movements, the alertness of his look, the controlled readiness of all his faculties. But his smile was engaging, almost boyish. He removed his hat and said in a deep, clear, pleasing voice:

"Good morning."

Jenny had surreptitiously hidden her cigarette under the tray of images.

"Good morning, Phil," she said. "I am glad to see you."

Joe looked at his sister-in-law. Even without the confession of her love of a moment ago he would have been made sure of the correctness of his surmise by the adoring look in her eyes.

"Your father stopped at the boarding house a moment ago," explained Phillip. "He says that Benny is sick."

"Yes; he has been coughing a good deal."

"That's too bad. Mrs. Blaney sends me over with this croup kettle."

"Thanks!" said Jenny.

Behind his turned back she motioned Joe to leave the room.

Her brother-in-law suddenly became quite businesslike. Here was a chance for a bargain. Corn Cob at 15 to 1! He must have that $2.

So, just as Phillip turned, he significantly held up two fingers.

Jenny nodded eagerly.

"Shall I get that medicine you wanted?" he asked with tender solicitude.

"Yes. Here's the money."

She produced her purse, always carefully guarded, often strenuously defended, and handed over the money.

Jennie had hidden her cigarette.

It nearly left her penniless for the rest of the week, but what did she care? To be alone with Phil!

Phillip took the chair nearer Moran's bed and brought it forward to the table at which Jenny had seated herself to resume her work. The tray she pulled forward a little more, completely hiding the cigarette she had been smoking.

The young diver seated himself and watched her for a little while. Under his gaze she became confused; dropped her brush and looked up, meeting his clear, deep blue eyes shyly.

He laughed a little.

"Will you mind if I smoke?" he asked.

"You know I don't, Phil. I love a good cigarette."

He had already taken out of his pocket the little box, placed a cigarette between his lips and returned it to the pocket of his coat. Now he produced it again and held it out to her hesitatingly, almost unwillingly.

CHAPTER II.

JENNY MORAN.

"YOU mean you don't want one?" Phil said.

"No, no," she answered hastily. "I have—I have given up smoking, you know."

She looked down at the trembling hands in her lap. Her cheeks burned, tears sprang to her eyes. Everything seemed to remind her—and him—of that brief past which she so regretted for his sake. It was always thus when they two were together. A chance word innocently spoken always must bring up what she wished that she could forget, still more that she could make him forget.

Now a sudden thought gave her an added stab of pain. She had lied to him, meanly, despicably. To appear worthier in his eyes she had refused his proffered cigarette—she had told him that she had given up smoking. And under the tray before her, within reach of his hand, lay the crushed butt she had been enjoying with all the eager relish of the confirmed cigarette fiend at the moment of his knock.

Phil looked at her for a little while longer in silence, then said easily:

"Well, and how are things going?"

"Rotten, thank you."

The man leaned forward sympathetically.

"Don't you feel—er—happier?" he asked softly.

Her self control gave way. What was the use of keeping straight? What was her reward? Misery and unrequited love. So she burst out:

"Happier? This is where I live, in one of John J. Haggleton's tenements. Do you see anything here to make me happier? I get up at 6, I cook and scrub and wash and paint these plaster creatures with that stuff for ten hours a day! At 6 cents per dozen! Do you see anything in that to make me happier?"

The man, unaware that he himself was the cause of this outbreak, looked at her in helpless distress. He was dumfounded. He felt staggered, frightened. Then he said very gravely:

Many Successful Men

owe their first start in business to a small savings account. The habit of laying aside regularly a small amount from wages or sale of products is one of the most valuable habits a man or woman can acquire. The amount is not missed, the sum rapidly increases, interest accumulates steadily; soon you have enough to start a business of your own.

A QUESTION that is often asked is, why don't the city of Charlevoix own a team as most of her sister cities do? We are sure we don't know, as on the score of economy and better fire protection no better investment could be made. There is never a time of the year when a city team and driver, could not be usefully employed at work for the city which the city now has to hire, and besides, if we had a team, not only would they be ready and trained so as to get to every fire on time but a vast amount of cleaning up, etc., which is now not done could be easily did by the city, without any extra expense.

We hope the council will take the matter up.

MRS. MARY H. WOOD

Passed Away Suddenly Thursday Morning May 5.

On Thursday morning, May 5th, at her home on Petoskey Ave., Mrs. Mary H. Wood passed away suddenly. Mrs. Wood was formerly Mary H. Bennett and was born in Hartford, Ohio, in 1814. In 1839 she was married to the late Orvis D. Wood and came with him to Norwood where they lived till 1880, when they moved to Charlevoix.

Mrs. Wood had three children, Ahila M., Henry and Mary Wood, the latter is the wife of Frederic Howard Clarke of Atwood. They all survive her. Mrs. Wood held a warm place in the hearts of the townspeople, her neighbors and a large circle of friends and their love and esteem have been attested by thoughtful consideration and sympathy for her family.

BETTER SERVICE

In speaking with Dr. Cronter, manager of the telephone, he said "I am anxious that Charlevoix shall have the very best service, it is possible to give, and he suggested in order to avoid some of the unnecessary delays, which are often experienced by the patrons in starting conversations, they should answer their telephones with their own names, or if in business place, the name of the firm or office.

When answering the telephone, instead of the meaningless word "hello" such phrases as the following should be used Mrs. Marting, Mrs. Auld, Mr. Usher, Mr. Smith, Courier office, Crane's Store, Jefferies' store, Manager's office etc. In this way the usual unnecessary preliminary conversation in which both parties say "Hello" to each other, one or more times, will be dispensed with and some of the time of the patron's will be saved. I believe the chief advantage of such a manner of answering the telephone, however, will be the merchant will know immediately the name of his customer, who is ordering goods, and this will save his time, and if would be an introduction of a businesslike, yet courteous custom into the etiquette of the telephone. What is your opinion. Lets try it out and see how it works."

Card of Thanks.

We wish to extend heartfelt thanks to all those good friends and neighbors who sent such beautiful flowers and offered their services during the sickness and death of our dear mother, Mrs. Leupold Miller.

FOR PROSECUTING ATTORNEY

A. B. Nicholas, Jr., and A. G. Urquhart Announce Candidacies.

Two candidates for the Republican nomination for prosecuting attorney have announced their candidacy this week, A. G Urquhart of Boyne City and A. B. Nicholas, Jr., of East Jordan.

Mr. Urquhart has served his city as city attorney for two terms and is the present circuit court commissioner for the county.

"Bert" Nicholas is a young man who has hosts of friends. He has assisted in the prosecutor's office the last two years. He also is the hustling secretary of the agricultural society.

Both candidates are well known and the contest will be a merry one as both have made good as public servants.

Opera House Leased

The Charlevoix opera house has been leased by the Majestic Amusement Company, with Wallie Campbell as manager. Their first attraction will be The Sunny South Company of all colored people. They have "The Girl that's all the Candy," a musical comedy with thirty people for May 23 and a second good company for June.

Manager Campbell states they will do all in his power to give the people first-class shows, also using the opera house to run, on Saturday nights, a moving picture show, when the films used will be Industrial, Towns of the World, Richard Wagner's Parsifal, Hand Colored Features, Historical, Dramatic and high class Comedy Features.

The Company believes that in running the two houses they can serve the public of Charlevoix better. Among the summer attractions are a few Musical Comedies Tom Marks Stock Company and the lessees own Stock Company.

THEATRICAL

J. C. Rockwell's New Sunny South Co.

As a sort of a diversion local theatre goers will have an opportunity of seeing something out of ordinary in the amusement line at the Charlevoix Theater, Saturday evening, May 14th., when J. C. Rockwell's New Sunny South company, said to be one of the largest, brightest and most complete colored organizations in America, will appear. This season the performance is up-to-date to the minute, bright and pleasing from start to finish. There is every ingredient of gayety and melody and the Ohio is composed of a strong array of vaudeville talent equalled by few and surpassed by none. Improved in many ways and with the introduction of much new business, this odd mixture of comedy, music, pantomine and specialities pretends to no higher mission than that of making a merry performance and this it accomplishes in perfect style. Dating from the opening scene until the final fall of the curtain there is not a minute in which some of the numerous cast are not occupied in rendering matters pleasing to the audience. They present a snappy, gingery performance well calculated to drive away the blues.

The organization is accompanied by a high-class solo concert band and a suberb orchestra. The band will head the Koontown parade, which will take place at noon.

The prices of admission have been placed at 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats are now selling at Chapel's

The Ladies' Auxilliary of Marion Center grange will give a warm sugar social at the grange hall, Friday evening, May 20. A program will be furnished. Bill 10 and 15 cents. 19-1

A Great Convention

At the former gathering there were nearly 5,000 delegates all men, seventy-five per cent of whom were business men from every state in the union, who came together to plan and carry forward the stupendous and glorious task of Gospel missions in all the world.

The mottoes kept constantly before the Congress were "This is the Only Generation we Can Reach," and "We Can Evangelize the World in this Generation if we Will."

The Baptist convention had an enrollment of delegates and visitors of over 2500 and was held in the University of Chicago buildings.

A BLOW IN JAMAICA

Things That Happen When a Big Storm Breaks Loose There.

A WEST INDIAN HURRICANE.

It Will Leap Out of a Clear Sky and Level Almost Everything In Its Path—Then Comes a Torrential Downpour That Ends In a Flood.

"Have you ever been through a West Indian hurricane?" said a man who has lived in the tropics on and off for a number of years. "Do you want to know what the experience is like?

"A hurricane will leap out of a clear sky, swoop down on a city, blow everything in its path flat and pass on. Then follows the tail of the hurricane, a steady breeze blowing in the same direction, but at a much lower velocity. This is likely to continue for many hours, sometimes for many days, and is always accompanied by a torrential downpour of rain.

"I was in Kingston, Jamaica, at the time of the hurricane of 1903. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon I was in my office on the top floor of a rickety wooden building. As suddenly as a clap of thunder the room went dark.

"I had a pretty good idea of what was about to happen and, going to the window, looked out across the roofs. A black cloud had whirled up out of the southwest, obscuring the sun, but the mountains back of the city were still golden with light.

"In less than a quarter of an hour the wind reached us. The first structure that went was a wooden watch-tower about 200 feet high that had been used in the old days to locate ships approaching the harbor. It had weathered all previous hurricanes, but this time it went down like a house of cards. Spars of lumber from that tower were carried as far as twenty blocks before they came to the ground.

"Then the spire of the church went, the roofs of a good many residences were torn off, and some fine palm trees in the public gardens snapped off about halfway from the ground. Buildings in Kingston, however, are calculated to stand a pretty severe blow. They are built only a few stories high, and the roofs present a broad and comparatively flat surface to the wind. Considering the velocity at which that hurricane was traveling, the damage was not great. Even my crazy office building withstood it. But the tail of the thing followed, with a heavier rain than I have ever seen before or since. To say that it came down in bucketfuls would be mild. It was as if the clerk of the weather had taken the plug out of some huge vat suspended above our heads and allowed the water to plump straight down on us.

"In three hours the macadam on the streets had been washed into the harbor. The street outside my window was a rushing river as much as four feet deep in places. I saw a cart try to cross it, but with the water above the axle of the wheel and the horse's legs being washed away from under it it was an impossible task, and the driver turned back. Big casks and packing cases were dancing on the surface like corks.

"As you can imagine, I did not get home to supper that evening. It was 8 o'clock before the rain stopped and the water in the streets had drained into the harbor. Even then traffic had not begun to reorganize itself.

"The trolley car tracks had been washed out, and no cars were running. Cabs, however, were doing a roaring business, and eventually I got a cabman to drive me home for three times his customary charge.

"The damage to property in Kingston mounted up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the real destruction was wrought in the country districts. Floods wiped out many a negro village and sent the flimsy houses floating down the rivers. The railroads were tied up for nearly a week. Every banana tree in the path of the hurricane was uprooted. Oh, yes, a West Indian hurricane can do a lot of damage when it gets busy.

"Loss of life, did you say? Of course there was. Nearly 200 people were killed throughout the island on that occasion, but we grow accustomed to that in the West Indies. We expect a hurricane every once in awhile, and we know that it will take its toll of human life when it comes. If you had been telling the story you would probably have mentioned that first of all, but sudden death is so common below the tropic of Cancer that we get callous, I suppose."—New York Sun.

A RUSSIAN PRISONER.

Experience of a Man Who Was Chained to a Wheelbarrow.

In writing of the Schlusselburg prison in McClure's Magazine David Soskice tells of a prisoner who was chained to a wheelbarrow:

"Schedrin had been condemned to hard labor in the convict mines of Siberia and for an attempt to escape from there had been sentenced to be chained to a heavy wheelbarrow. When the order came for his transfer from Siberia to St. Petersburg no conveyance could be found large enough to contain him, the wheelbarrow and the convoy of gendarmes. Yet, as the wheelbarrow had become a part of the prisoner, the gendarmes were afraid to leave it behind. It was therefore decided to place Schedrin with his convoy in one cart and the wheelbarrow behind in another. For several months, day and night, Schedrin and the gendarmes galloped through Siberia upon a troika (a three horsed cart or sledge), while another sped behind them upon which the wheelbarrow reposed, causing the deepest amazement among the peasants in the villages through which they passed. Upon the arrival of the prisoner in SS. Peter and Paul he was once again chained to the barrow, and only after he had been six weeks in the Schlusselburg was he finally detached from it and given freedom of movement within the narrow confines of his cell.

"'When they unchained me,' said Schedrin subsequently, 'I could not get enough movement. I wanted to run and run, and it seemed to me that I could never stop. How strange it is that men who can enjoy perfect freedom of movement never realize the wonderful happiness that is theirs.'"

THE BABY TURTLE.

He Has to Paddle His Own Canoe From the Moment of Birth.

Just so soon as a baby turtle emerges from the egg off he scuttles down to the sea. He has no one to teach him, no one to guide him. In his curious little brain there is implanted a streak of caution based upon the fact that until a certain period in his life his armor is soft and no defense against hungry fish, and he at once seeks shelter in the tropical profusion of the gulf weed, which holds within its branching fronds an astonishing abundance of marine life. Here the young turtle feels unmolested while his armor undergoes the hardening process.

Whatever the young sea turtle eats and wherever he eats it, facts not generally ascertained, one thing is certain—it agrees with him immensely. He leads a pleasant sort of life, basking in the tropical sun and cruising leisurely in the cool depths.

Once he has attained the weight of twenty-five pounds, which usually occurs within the first year, the turtle is free from all danger. After that no fish, or mammal, however ravenous, however well armed with teeth, interferes with the turtle.

When once he has withdrawn his head from its position of outlook into the folds of his neck between the two shells intending devourers may struggle in vain to make an impression upon him.—Harper's Weekly.

EELS IN JAPAN.

The Restaurant Cook Catches Alive the Fish the Patron Selects.

Entering a Japanese restaurant, a guest who wishes broiled eels and they is led to a tank of squirming fresh water eels and bidden to point out the object of his preference, says a writer in the Delineator. The cook, who stands by, selects the wriggling victim of his choice, strikes its head smartly upon a wooden block and, squatting by it, grasps the creature's neck, inserts a knife in the left side of the vertebrae and dexterously runs it down to the tail, then, rapidly applying his instrument to the other side of the backbone, repeats the process, leaving the eel split open.

Then, chopping the flattened eel into three inch lengths, the pieces are plunged into boiling water to make the skin tender, long bamboo splints used as skewers are thrust through them, and they are then placed on rods over glowing charcoal and broiled brown, being plunged from time to time into a vessel that contains old soy of the color and consistency of molasses. These preparations concluded, the steaming eels again are drained and placed in red lacquer boxes with rice and set before the customer.

Neighborhood Notes

The village of Buckley has passed an ordinance anticipating the return of saloons in which $300 is added to the state requirement of $500, making Buckley's total license fee $800. It is also required that saloons in Buckley shall close at nine o'clock in the evening and not open in the morning until seven.

It is reported that Quincy Thacker will contest with David G. Chandler for his seat in the House of Representatives for Grand Traverse district. It is also reported that Robert Wullers, candidate for state senator, will have opposition from W. D. C. Germaine, also of Traverse City. Mr. Germaine has just completed a two-year term as mayor of Traverse City.

Representatives of the Crown Chemical company of Toledo, O., came before the public domain commission with an offer to purchase the pine stumps on these sections of the state land located in Crawford county, near Grayling.

The stumps will be utilized in the manufacture of turpentine. Heretofore the state have been compelled to pay a good price to have the stumps removed from the land and it is expected that several thousand dollars may be realized and at the same time the land will be cleared. Land Commissioner Russell was authorized to set a price on the stumps.

An aggregation of Chicago land speculators who platted 10,000 or 12,000 lots anywhere within ten or twelve miles of Houghton and Higgins lakes, certainly put across an expensive scheme for the state of Michigan, as a result of their operations in selling "summer resort lots" up there in the sand or swamp, the state being obliged to invest about $10 an acre in land worth about $3 or $4 an acre. The bill this year for advertising alone is $2,300 and the proposition is only well under way so far as the state is concerned.

The state public domain commission in order to place the seal of disapproval on the scheme, has adopted the suggestion of Secretary A. C. Carton and placed in the forest reserve between 2,000 and 3,000 of these lots which have been transferred to the land department by Auditor General Fuller, the taxes not having been paid. In this way the speculators can not get hold of these lots and sell them over again.

Originally these speculators platted about 10,000 lots and sold them all over the country to seekers after summer homes who liked the prospectus descriptions of the lakes and their surroundings. The lots are said to have been sold for about $10 a piece aside from a $2 fee for an abstract.

When the buyer found their summer homes were back in the sand or swamps, instead of near to the lake they, of course, abandoned their property and did not pay the taxes, which started the lots through the channels in the auditor general's office to be sold for taxes.

Of course no one bought the tax titles and as the five years are up on various of these little 30x10 foot lots the auditor general deeds them to the land department to be sold.

In the Dutch recently decided to the land department there are two or three thousand of these lots and the owners who platted them and sold them to summer homeseekers, have commenced to bid them in and start the chain of sales once more.

Recently there came down from Crawford county the advertisement of tax sales of some of these lots. There were seven full pages newspaper size, and that advertisement costs the state about $2,500.

By the action of the commission, however, further operations with this group of lots is shut off from a new market and the state saved further expense.

LINCOLN'S LESSON.

The Way He Learned to Tell When a Thing Is Proved.

Abraham Lincoln was once asked how he acquired his wonderful logical powers and his acuteness in analysis.

Lincoln replied: "It was my terrible discouragement which did that for me. When I was a young man I went into an office to study law. I saw that a lawyer's business is largely to prove things. I said to myself, 'Lincoln, when is a thing proved?' That was a poser. 'What constitutes proof? Not evidence; that was not the point. There may be evidence enough, but wherein consists the proof? I groaned over the question and finally said to myself, 'Ah, Lincoln, you can't tell.' Then I thought what use is it for me to be in a law office if I can't tell when a thing is proved?

"So I gave it up and went back home. Soon after I returned to the old log cabin I fell in with a copy of Euclid. I had not the slightest notion of what Euclid was, and I thought I could find out. I therefore began at the beginning, and before spring I had gone through the old Euclid's geometry and could demonstrate every proposition in the book. Then in the spring, when I had got through with it, I said to myself one day, 'Ah, do you know when a thing is proved?' and I answered 'Yes, sir; I do. Then you may go back to the law shop.' and I went."

"You must be glad that you have given up the old life? You are doing right, anyhow."

"Doing right?" she echoed scornfully. "Who cares whether I do right?"

"You know we all cere."

"All? Who, all?" she persisted. "Does Joe Caffrey care? Nit! He'd rather have me go back to the old life so he could work me for a ten or twenty when he was broke! Oh, I guess yes!"

She sat quiet now but for her trembling fingers, nervously jerking and twisting at her dress, and the trembling of her lips, which she bit viciously with her small white teeth. She stared stonily before her, but her eyes were dry. If she had only wept his task might have been easier. His understanding of women did not go beyond tears.

"Then," he stammered at last, "then it is only your promise to Liz that makes you do this?"

"It isn't even that," she explained patiently. "Yes, I promised Liz that I would keep straight, but Liz is dead. She'd never know what I do, or if she did know she would see that this life is too hard for me."

She looked around the miserable bare room and continued:

"The only thing that keeps me from going back"—

"Don't say that."

"It's true, Phil; it's true. The only thing is I don't want to make you feel bad. That's the only reason."

She asked softly, with infinite longing:

"It would make you feel bad, wouldn't it, Phil?"

"It certainly would, Jenny."

"I know," she said gratefully, "I know Liz died only three weeks ago, but it seems a year. She made us both kneel down by her bed. I had on a big hat with red feathers. You remember? Then she made me promise, and she made you promise to help me."

"I'll keep my promise. I'll help you."

The girl added sadly:

"Ah, if I hadn't married George!"

"Jenny!"

"Well, it spoiled my life all right. It's true. My life—look at it! I say I never had a chance!"

"You have a chance now, Jenny."

The words aroused in her a false hope. Could it be? She leaned nearer him, her face close to his.

"You used to think me pretty," she whispered. "Phil, you couldn't, you wouldn't"—

He hastily shrank back, regretting the impulsive action instantly. But Jenny had understood.

"What a fool I am!" she cried. "How can you care for me when you love another woman? Oh, I know!"

"What do you know?" he asked sternly, rising.

"I know that you are struck on that girl—that trained nurse at the boarding house."

"Miss Lawrence! Who told you?"

"No one has told me. I am a woman."

She glanced at him searchingly and read the truth in his face. Controlling the pain at her heart, hiding the desolation that had suddenly blighted her life, she asked question after question, bravely taking each blow.

"Have you asked her yet? Did you ask her last night? And she said 'Yes?' I want you to be happy, Phil. I congratulate you."

She, too, had risen. She was pale, but quiet.

"You won't be different with me now that you are in love?"

"Of course not, Jenny."

He held out his hand, which she shook loyally. She added pathetically:

"Because that's all I have in the world—your friendship, Phil."

A step was heard on the stair. It approached the door.

"Here she is," said the diver, his eyes alight with joy.

The door opened, to admit Margaret Lawrence, her neat nurse's uniform partly hidden under a dark coat.

She was not so tall as Jenny. The two women formed, indeed, a striking contrast. Margaret was dark and healthy looking, carried herself well and had the tranquil assurance of movement and speech of her profession. Jenny, her golden hair piled in a disorderly mass on top of her head, her cheap black dress unfastened at the throat, had the discouraged, indifferent ways of the woman whom poverty has already conquered.

Margaret gave Philip a dazzling smile, nodded cheerily to Jenny and said:

"Good morning."

Philip took her hand, pressed it and said:

"How beautiful you look this morning!"

"You foolish boy—have you been thinking of me?"

Philip, who had bent forward as if to kiss Margaret, shrank back, turned around to Jenny and said:

"I beg your pardon—I forgot. Margaret, I want you to know my old friend, Jenny Moran—Miss Lawrence."

Jenny nodded.

"Happy to make your acquaintance," she said, but her tone was hostile.

She could not bear to see these two together.

"Sorry that I cannot stay," she added, "but I must be at the factory at 8."

Margaret looked at her, a little astonished at the curt tone in which the girl spoke, but she answered readily:

"I will write down the instructions for the treatment of the child."

"All right," said Jenny, almost insolently. "Goodby."

She stared for a moment into her unconscious rival's eyes, then left the room, slamming the door behind her.

"She's a little crude sometimes," explained Philip apologetically, "but she has a good heart."

Their eyes met; Jenny was forgotten. Philip drew Margaret, unresisting, into his arms, against his mighty chest.

She looked up into his eyes and offered him her tenderly trembling mouth. He kissed her fondly, reverently, thankfully.

The woman was the first to return to the present and the work at hand. She softly, regretfully, freed herself from his clasp.

"This is most unprofessional. I am here to look after a sick child."

She glanced about the room.

"Where is the patient?" she asked.

"In there. Do not go in yet, Margaret."

She temporized, half unwillingly.

She sighed a little to herself at the untidy tenement house room and contented herself with saying:

"This is one of John J. Haggleton's tenements, is it not?"

"Yes. He is Moran's landlord. You should hear him talk about him—the robber!"

"And this is 'lung block,' where there is so much consumption?"

"It is."

"And that little child is coughing already? No wonder—in such an atmosphere!"

She seated herself in Jenny's chair by the table. Philip taking the one he had occupied when the poor girl had made her confession to him.

"Just think!" he began. "We meet in a boarding house where I belong and you do not. Naturally I fall in love with you because you are a splendid, beautiful girl—yes, you are—and all of a sudden—bang!—you have promised to marry me."

She glanced at him curiously.

"You big, strong man, why do you say that I do not belong in a boarding house?"

"Because you are a lady. You never lived in a boarding house before, did you?"

"No."

"You were never brought up in the expectation of having to earn your own living?"

"No. My father was ruined in business, and I had to choose between marriage and earning my own living."

"I knew it," said Philip with quiet conviction. "I—I never loved a woman before, and this—your love means everything to me. I am only a workingman, but I am going to rise. It's in me. I know it, and if you will trust me"—

"I do trust you Philip, dear."

"How beautiful you look this morning!"

"I feel that I can do anything if have you to work for—anything! have had a wonderful feeling of power lately since—I have come to love you—Margaret. I will gain the big prizes for you—the money prizes of this world."

"I do not want money, Philip. That is why I took up nursing, because my family would have insisted on my marrying a stupid idler who happened to be rich. Listen, dear. I love you because you are working for something better than money—because you have high ideals and because you give time and thought to helping the poor."

His face glowed.

"We will help the poor in a big way, you and I, before we get through," he promised her.

"That's what makes me love you, dear," she repeated.

A whistle sounded in the street. Philip stood alert.

"That's Gentle's signal," he announced—"you know, dear, my friend at the boarding house?"

"He has a fine face. I like him."

"He has been like a father to me. I owe everything to him. My real father"—

He broke off abruptly, his face clouding over.

Gentle entered, took off his cap and bowed to Margaret. He was a man some fifty-five years old, of middle height, stockily built, and tanned by exposure. He was simply dressed in a blue pea jacket, dark trousers and heavy boots.

He was a diver, like Philip, who had learned under his guidance the trade of which he was now an acknowledged master.

The girl gave him her hand.

"I have just seen the captain," said the old diver, turning again to Philip. "He says you can have the day off. I told the captain this was a special day for you."

Gentle looked at Margaret with an apologetic smile.

"Does Mr. Gentle know?" she whispered to Philip.

"Oh, yes; I know, Miss Lawrence. Philip has no secrets from me—and such a secret. My children! You know," he added in explanation to the girl, "he is like a son to me."

"Then I will be like a daughter," she rejoined promptly and sweetly.

"My daughter Margaret!" Gentle exclaimed. Then he added reverentially: "It was the name of Philip's mother. She would be very happy at the choice her son has made."

"Gentle," Philip broke in, "I wish you would tell Margaret about the night when you first saw my mother."

They sat down.

"It was twenty-two years ago," began Gentle haltingly, "a wild night and bitter cold. Mrs. Blaney (I have boarded with her for more than twenty-five years)—Mrs. Blaney and I were playing checkers in the basement sitting room when all of a sudden we heard the bell. 'Sakes alive, who's that?' said Mrs. Blaney. And when I opened the door, there stood a woman in the storm, holding a little boy by his hand, and she was white as death. 'God have mercy,' said I, 'what are you doing out in a night like this?' 'We are in great trouble,' said she. 'Come in,' said I, 'in the name of God!' And in they came, and I saw that the little boy was so cold that the tears were frozen on his face. That little boy was Philip. He was then barely four years old."

"And to this day I have never heard what sent my mother out into the storm," Philip added.

"She never told you?" Margaret looked thoughtful.

"She died with her secret unspoken unless"—the young man turned to his friend and looked at him inquiringly—"unless— Gentle, I have sometimes thought that my mother told you her secret."

"She told me a little, Philip. There were things which she did not wish you to know."

Philip looked grave and asked peremptorily:

"Is this thing you are keeping back something that this girl who is going to be my wife ought to know?"

"It is not."

Philip gave a sigh of relief. Turning to Margaret, he explained:

"It is something about my father—some trouble between him and my mother, isn't it, Gentle?"

"Don't ask me about your father, my boy!"

Here the little girl Emmy entered the room from Jenny's sleeping closet, crossed it without paying any attention to the three grownups, grasped a chair and began to drag it behind her.

"You little tot!" exclaimed Margaret. "What do you want that chair for?"

"It's going to be Benny's yacht."

"Oh, my patient—I forgot him!" exclaimed Margaret remorsefully.

She got up, grasped Emmy's dirty little hand and darted through the door.

Philip inevitably gravitated toward the door through which Margaret had disappeared. As he closed it behind him Gentle heard him say, "Let me help you put things to rights here."

A few moments passed with Gentle looking expectantly out of the window. He heard a honk and at the same moment saw a powerful motorcar turn the corner of Market street—a rare apparition there, attracting no end of attention and far from friendly comment. A heavy, slow step on the stairs, a woman's shrill voice giving a direction, then he said distinctly:

"This way, Mr. Haggleton."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Quality of Butter.

The quality of the butter depends to a great degree upon the food and drink of the cow. She should have clean, pure water and wholesome food. Much care should be taken in the selection of the ration. The individual cow has much to do in this regard. But with respect to the part that is played in handling the product of the cow too much carelessness is evident in the processes of buttermaking. After churning is finished the butter and milk mixture should remain quiet for about ten minutes in order to let the butter come to the surface. A cup of cold water will hasten the process. An old recipe says: The butter should be carefully skimmed off into a wooden bowl half full of water. The water should be repeatedly changed until it shows no indication of milkiness. It is important that the butter should not be pressed or worked during the process of removing the milk from the butter. After this the butter may be pressed into a mass and salt to the extent of one-fortieth its weight worked into it. The water should be well pressed out, but the less worked the more perfectly its granular character is maintained.

His Last Request.

Charles Dickens used to relate an anecdote of the last moments of Fauntleroy, the great banker, hanged for forgery in 1824. His elegant dinners had always been followed by some remarkable and matchless curacao, the source of which he kept a deep secret. Three of his boon companions had an interview with him in the condemned cell the day before his execution. They were about to retire when the most impressive of the three stepped back and said: "Fauntleroy, you stand on the verge of the grave. Remember the text, my dear man, that 'we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can take nothing out.' Have you any objection, therefore, to tell me now, as a friend, where you got that curacao?"

PROPOSED GOOD ROADS QUESTION

Prepared by the National Good Roads Bureau

FOR THE MICHIGAN STATE GRANGE

Effort Will be Made to Pass Law Next Winter

It After Discussion Majority Approves—Non-partisian Commission Provided for—Convict Labor a Feature.

In compliance with a regulation adopted at the last meeting of the Michigan State grange the executive committee has been working on a new road law. Logan W. Page, director of the office of public roads. United States department of agriculture, has prepared a road law for the state grange and should this prove satisfactory to the majority of the people of Michigan efforts will be made to pass it at the next session of the legislature.

The bill itself proposes to do away with the present system of state supervision, creating, in the place of the state highway commissioner, a state highway commissioner to consist of a professor of civil engineering from each of two leading universities or colleges and one civilian member to be appointed by the governor. It is claimed this would result in a non-partisan and technically competent commission. This commission would serve without pay.

Then it is proposed to engage a man with technical qualifications to act as a state highway engineer, the commission to engage him and fix his salary. This official would be empowered to appoint all of his assistants with the advice and consent of the commission, to receive all bids, award all contracts and, in fact, have full authority in all executive work of the department.

The building of roads under the county system is favored, each county to go before the highway engineer with plans for approval. All surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates would be made by the highway engineer improvements to cost $2,000 and more would be let to contract. The supervision and direction of all such work would be vested in the highway engineer.

The highway engineer is to keep all state reward roads in good repair, the counties being liable to him for the cost. The cost of all work of building roads is to be paid first by the state, the counties to reimburse the state partially for such work. A property tax to raise the funds necessary for the state's participation in road improvements is provided for and the state highway fund is intended to be distributed among the counties in an equitable manner,

A provision is made in the bill to utilize the state convicts in the preparation of road materials. By having great quantities of road material prepared at state institutions, its distribution throughout the entire state could easily be made.

A provision also is made in the bill directing the state highway engineer to prepare a tentative system of trunk line of state roads to be paid for entirely at the expense of the state. The evolution of state aid laws in the states which have for any length of time adopted the principal of state aid has been toward the trunk line system. Conspicuous examples of this are found in the states of New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland and Washington.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

For the Month of April as Reported by Secretary of State.

The condition of wheat shows a slight decrease from the figures given in the April report, the average being 86 in the state, 97 in the northern counties and 95 in the Upper Peninsula. The average condition on April first, in the state was 88, and in the northern counties 97. The per cent of wheat sown that will be plowed up because winter killed is 4 in the southern counties, 1 in the central and northern counties and 3 in the state. The damage by Hessian fly in per cent is 2 in the state and southern counties and 1 in the central and northern counties.

The average condition of rye in the northern counties 97, in the upper peninsula 98, state 92.

The condition of meadows and pastures in the state and northern counties is 93. The acreage of clover sown compared with an average for the past five years in the state and upper peninsula is 98, and in northern counties 100.

The acreage sown up to date compared with an average for the past five years is 100 in the state, ninty-nine in the central counties, 101 in the northern counties and 96 in the upper peninsula.

The average monthly wages with board, in the southern counties is $25.62 in the central counties $24.38, in the northern counties $21.17, in the upper peninsula $25.25 and in the state $25.14. The average wages by the day without board, in the southern counties is $1.58, in the central counties $1.48, in the northern counties $1.46 and in the upper peninsula $1.68 and in the state $1.54. The average wages in the state last year, by the month with board was $23.21 and the average wages by the day without board was $1.42.

There is quite a diversity of opinion among fruit correspondents relative to the damage suffered from the frost throughout the state. Correspondents in the south western portion of the state, where the frost in April was the most severe, report fruit prospects much better than expected immediately after the freeze and very generally are of the opinion that the out look for an average crop is encouraging. The spraying of fruit trees has greatly increased this season.

CHARLEVOIX CITY BAND MINSTREL

Will be Given Soon for Purpose of Raising Money for Uniforms.

The Charlevoix City Band has decided to give a minstrel performance during the coming fortnight to raise money to buy uniforms for the band and were fortunate enough by the kindness of W. G. Campbell, manager of the Majestic theater, to secure the services of Edward Russell who was last seen here in "The Man on the Box," is in conjunction with Mr. Campbell to have a permanent stock company for Charlevoix and Petoskey for the summer and has gladly donated his services to this most worthy cause. He has already started rehearsals and says that the local Rockstaders and Primroses will certainly give a rare entertainment both from a musical and comedy standpoint of view, as some of the best local talent available will be used in this delightful sort of performance.

All of the latest songs, dances and other features which go to make up a big first part performance have been placed in rehearsal, together with a big olio or vaudeville bill.

The date has not been announced as yet but the minstrel is in a worthy cause and should play to a packed house.

OUR BUSY CONGRESSMAN

Hon. Francis H. Dodds Making Record as Worker.

Sheriff Landon was down to Washington recently and called on the representation from Mt. Pleasant who are now in the capital city. He said Miss Baldwin and E. Nugent Dodds are kept busy answering the volumes of mail that are directed from over this district to our congressman. Nugent is also attending a night law school. Miss Cooper has secured one of the finest positions as clerk in the census department. Mr. Dodds is working even harder there than when taking care of his big law business here, and that means twelve to fifteen hours a day. The sheriff says he is highly respected for his ability among his fellows of the house, and heard many nice compliments concerning him—Mt. Pleasant Times.

Miss Verne Greacen who has a government position at Washington finds leisure frequently to witness the proceedings of congress. In a recent letter to her parents she mentions such a visit and noted that speaker Cannon was not in his accustomed place. Looking closer she discovered that it was our own member, Mr. F. H. Dodds, who was yielding the gavel and presiding with dignity and ease over the deliberations of the law-makers in the lower house.—Kalkaska Leader.

ME-GU-ZEE ASSOCIATION

Held Most Successful Meeting in Its History

Next May the Association Will Meet in This City.

The seventh annual convention of the "Me-gu-zee" association of the Order of the Eastern Star closed Thursday after a two days' session at Masonic temple in Petoskey. About one hundred and twenty-five delegates and visitors were in attendance besides the members of the order living in the city. Visitors from the following towns were registered: Harbor Springs, Charlevoix, Mackinaw City, Boyne City, Bellaire, Elk Rapids, Mancelona, Adrian, Acme; East Jordan, Central Lake, Kalamazoo, East Bay, Kalkaska, Grand Rapids, Traverse City and St. Ignace.

The meeting has been one of the most successful in the history of the association, and the members seem well pleased with the events of the two day's work.

The program was carried out in regular order, and many pleasant features presented themselves besides those which were anticipated, one of these being the presentation of a beautiful "Me-gu-zee" spoon to the grand worthy matron, Mrs. Clara E. C. Eldredge, of Adrian, who has been the guest of honor during the convention.

Charlevoix chapter, O. E. S., performed the the initiatory work Wednesday evening with great credit to the order, and this city will have the pleasure of entertaining the society in May of next year.

Penlah chapter, of Petoskey, entertained the visitors with a dinner at noon Thursday in the dining hall of the Masonic temple.

The closing work of the association was the election of the following officers for the coming year: President, Mrs. Anna Soles, of Traverse City; first vice-president, Mrs. Jennie Hoxie, East Bay second vice, Orla Gregory, Petoskey; secretary, Esther M. Frank, Bellaire; treasurer, Mrs. Jennie Bacon, Kalkaska; marshall, Mrs. Anna Robinson, Boyne City; chaplain, Mrs. L. M. Rowan, of Petoskey.

CHARLEVOIX VS. HARBOR SPRINGS

Will Play Base Ball Saturday on North Side Grounds.

After three disastrous defeats by supposedly weaker teams, Charlevoix high school base ball team did the unexpected Saturday, when it took the strong Traverse City high school team into camp by the tune of 10:8. The local team certainly showed a big reversal in form, having everything which helps to make a winning team. Especially noticeable because of its absence in the previous games, was the ginger the bunch displayed. The whole team had the "pep" and it was a pleasure to watch them play. Traverse has several players who are playing their fourth year and are good experienced men, so the locals feel justly proud of their victory.

J. Powers and Krulick, the battery men, worked well together and the whole team played well with them. Each team made six errors, which is a remarkable small number considering the sand lot on which the game was played.

Next Saturday the team will play Harbor Springs on the northside field.

Score by innings.

CURVES AND GRADES.

They Are Becoming Important Owing to Increase of Automobile Traffic.

Until recently the position of highways has been governed more by grade than by alignment. For obvious reasons horse drawn vehicles demanded easy grades, but were little affected by sharp curves. Consequently roads were so laid out as to meet this requirement, being made to wind around hills and follow tortuous water courses with little attempt to provide curves of long radii. The result is a highway system which, except in level country, is composed of crooked roads, well adapted to the needs of wagon traffic, picturesque and pleasing, but unsuited to the requirements of a traffic composed of heavy motor driven vehicles traveling at high speed

Safety is a factor that hitherto has entered into the work of road building to only a very limited extent, but which is constantly assuming more importance. The rapidly increasing use of motor vehicles places this new responsibility on the roadmaker, and the building of new roads with longer curves and the realignment of old roads will do much toward reducing the dangers attendant upon the new modes of transportation.

The existence of a curve generally, though not necessarily, presupposes the presence on the inner side of some obstruction shutting off the view of the roadway ahead from a vehicle traveling around it. Curves having radii of 1,000 feet or less are of common occurrence in such places, and a width of thirty feet in the clear is as great as that found on many country roads. On such a curve the driver of an automobile running in the middle of the road can see an approaching car, also in the middle of the road, only about 350 feet ahead. At thirty miles an hour a little less than nine seconds are required to traverse this distance, and if each car were running at that speed only a little over four seconds would elapse between the instant when they came in sight of each other and their meeting. Many considerations prohibit the establishment of an arbitrary minimum radius for highway curves, but a careful study of prevailing conditions shows clearly that more attention will have to be paid to this phase of road building in the future than has been accorded to it in the past. Roads must be economical, they must be durable, and they must satisfy the conditions that experience has imposed upon them, but they must be safe.

OIL VALUABLE TO ROADS.

Makes Them Waterproof in Winter and Dustproof in the Summer.

Some interesting data concerning the value of oil in the making of good roads appeared in a Kansas experiment station bulletin. An evenly graded stretch of sandy loam road a quarter of a mile long and thirty feet wide was sprayed with an oil residue or residuum. A dust mulch about four inches deep had formed on this road and had caused almost a cessation of traffic. The road was first plowed to a depth of four and one-half inches and then thoroughly pulverized with a harrow. Oil to the extent of one gallon per square yard was then sprinkled and harrowed in, after which the road was floated. The road was closed to traffic for a week after this treatment.

The effect of freezing weather on the roadbed was the object first studied. The results proved that the oil made a waterproof shed and kept the underlying soil sufficiently dry to prevent serious injury by frosts. The question of the durability of a road seems also settled when roads are treated with oil, as this road successfully withstood all kinds of heavy traffic. In the hottest season it was deemed necessary to spray again with oil, about half a gallon to the square yard, to keep down a slight layer of dust. The estimated cost of oiling this road is $525 per mile, although some of it varied and the extreme cost went as high as a rate of $1,300 per mile.

Importance of Good Roads.

It is hard to figure out who is hit the hardest when a rural route is discontinued on account of the impassability of the roads. It is a harm worker to the farmer on the route that measures greater than the harm to any one who is a beneficiary of the service, but the merchant is also a great loser, and it stands him well in hand to keep advised of the road conditions in his locality and to talk, act and work for good roads all the time.

Station Agents to Boost Good Roads.

The officials of the Pennsylvania railroad have started a movement to have station agents along its lines become good roads advocates in an effort to have the roads near the stations improved. The railroad officials believe that improvement of the roads would reduce the time that cars are compelled to wait on sidings when farmers are unable to haul goods over the poor roads in bad weather

A Word For the Tightwad.

In France they have an expressive phrase, "liquid money." It means that part of the family income which is used for the necessities and luxuries of life. It is quite apart from and kept apart from the more serious, substantial part of the income, which is the saved part. In America the entire income is "liquid, and the man who attempts to make part of it solid is called a "tightwad." A "tightwad" is really a man who creates a principal—a capital, in other words—and he is the living example of what every private business must be and of how the country's resources should be handled.—Argonaut.

Voting In Spain.

Voting in Spain is held to be a duty to the community, not merely a privilege of the individual, and neglect of civic obligations carries its own penalty. Male adults of legal age and under seventy, with the exception of priests, notaries and judges, are required to vote in municipal elections. Failure to cast a ballot is punishable by having one's name published as censure for neglect, by having taxes increased 2 per cent, by suffering a deduction of 1 per cent in salary if employed in the public service and for the second offense the loss of right to hold elective or appointive office.

The Battle

CHAPTER III.
"JOHN J."

GENTLE looked curiously at the man who entered the room, glanced sharply around it, and then fixed a pair of cold, commanding, penetrating eyes upon him.

So this was Haggleton—the "John J." of daily parlance, the master of oil fields and coal fields, of iron mines and railroads, and steamship lines, of banks and trust companies; the man whose power was felt in Europe and in Asia as in America; the chosen subject of the bitterest attacks of social reformers and revolutionaries; the man who could afford to fight the government of the most powerful country in the world on terms of equality.

"John J."

Gentle saw before him a burly man of sixty, gray-haired with a bristling gray mustache waxed at the ends, a man dressed with unobtrusive taste.

But it was the face that commanded his attention. The steely eyes had held him from the first. He now noted the stern brow, with the fold between the eyebrows; the iron jaw, the lines at the corners of the grim mouth, the straight, short nose, which suggested Kitchener.

But the old diver, accustomed to picking strong, healthy men for the dangerous work of which he had charge, saw something else which the cartoonists failed to suggest in their drawings. He saw as plainly as John J.'s famous physician that the millionaire was not a well man. The pallor of his face, the color of his eyeballs, the wrinkled circles beneath them, the momentary scantness of breath, all this told its tale to Gentle.

Haggleton's eyes flashed a little as he growled:

"Of all filthy places!"

"It's one of your tenements, Mr. Haggleton," said Gentle pointedly. "I wanted you to see it."

"You did? That's not the point." Then, briskly, "You said you had papers to show me."

"So I have, so I have!"

Gentle pointed to a chair.

"I have very little time," continued the master of millions aggressively. "My auto is waiting, and my yacht, too, with guests aboard. I told you that I sail within an hour."

"On a long cruise. I read it in the papers. That's why I called on you yesterday."

Haggleton's eyes were everywhere. They kept Gentle under constant surveillance. His secretary was at the head of the stairs without, his mechanician in the hallway below. He had given no orders, but he knew this. Utterly fearless, he yet did not intend to be caught in a trap.

"I came because what you told me you knew is important, if true. Where are your proofs?"

Gentle drew a bundle of papers from the inner pocket of his pea jacket. Haggleton took the first letter, opened it and glanced at it. He shot a curious glance at the respectable looking workingman seated opposite him and opened a second one.

This he read carefully, the pallor of his face increasing as he read. But his hand did not tremble. Blackmail? Oh, well, he would see about that!

He said at last:

"My wife! It's her handwriting! Then you knew her?"

"I knew her for years."

Haggleton bent forward, the bundle of papers crushed between his clinched hands. A rapid, nervous twitch of the left side of the face was the only outward expression of his feelings, but to those who knew him it would have signified much. Gentle sat perfectly silent, waiting for him to speak again.

"Margaret!" murmured Haggleton musingly, tenderly. "Margaret! After twenty-two years!"

He mastered himself with an effort, and sat up straight in his chair, the commander of men again. There was a battle before him, a battle over a secret, and for a secret—the solution of the mystery of his private life.

His first question was asked quietly, almost indifferently:

"How was my wife living when you knew her?"

"In the boarding house where I was. She had a little money, but it did not last long. Then she tried to work, but—it was not easy, and—I—was earning good wages and—I helped her."

Haggleton's mind seized upon this point and registered it in its usual orderly manner. The attempt to establish a pecuniary claim had come earlier in the interview than he had expected.

"You say you helped her?"

"Yes."

"Did she ask you for assistance?"

"No."

"Then why did you help her?"

"Because I loved her." And lower still he added, "I wanted her to marry me."

"Good God!" Haggleton exclaimed.

"That's how she came to tell me her story," continued Gentle.

"What did she tell you?"

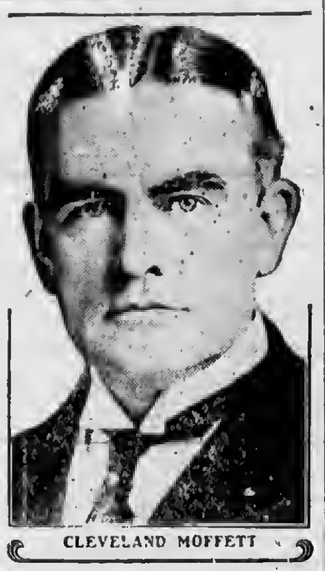
"She said," returned Gentle distinctly, "that you were cruel."

"To her?"

"In your dealings consumed with greed for money. That is why she left you."

Haggleton ruminated upon this.

"And that is why she left me."



CLEVELAND MOFFETT

He thrust the thought away from him.

"Was she—was she living alone?" he asked.

"No; she had with her a child—your son."

The millionaire leaned back in his chair. Yes, this man was no impostor. Thus far he had told a straight story. His desire to know the truth which he had sought for twenty years, and his accurate judgment of the man before him counseled him that it was safe to proceed with less caution now.

"Why did she steal my son and hide him from me?"

"To save him from your influence. He was her son too. She wished him to be an honest man."

"Who says that I am not an honest man?"

"Your wife said so."

Haggleton became impatient.

"I want to know about my son," he commanded imperiously. Then, with a break in his voice, "Is he—is he alive?".

"Living and well!"

"My son!" he added in an eager whisper. "I want to see him now!"

He mastered the softened mood and became his usual strong self again.

"Where is he?".

"You will see him presently."

Haggleton's first suspicion suggested itself again.

"Oh," he said, "you want to make terms! You want money?"

"If I wanted money, Mr. Haggleton, I should have asked for it long ago. I have known this for twelve years. I sent you word of her death."

"Ah, it was you! You covered your tracks well. It is you who have kept my son from me for twelve years!"

"It was his mother's wish—her command."

A burly man of sixty.

"Her command? Then why have you brought me here? What the devil do you want?"

"Let me finish. Your wife saw want and suffering face to face, and it was her dream that some day your son should make atonement for his father's wrongdoing."

"Atonement?"

Both men had risen now, facing each other with growing excitement.

"Yes, atonement with your money, by the right use of it. Some day, when he was strong enough, Philip was to meet you, to know you as his father. That day has come."

Haggleton said snappishly, jeeringly:

"I see. He is to show me my evil ways, and I am to be converted. Rubbish! You have made a prig of him!"

"I have made a man of him—such a man as his mother wanted him to be."

"What does he do? What can he earn?"

"He is a skilled workman with the Atlantic Wrecking company—a master diver. He earns from $8 to $15 a day. He stands six feet in his stockings, he measures forty-eight inches around the chest, and he has an arm like an iron bar."

"You don't say!" Haggleton was smiling, his eyes gleaming with pride. Gentle continued:

"And he has a will of his own, and ideas."

"Ideas? What sort of ideas?" There was a sudden suspicion in the question.

"The ideas his mother gave him—ideas of justice and kindness. She was a noble woman. She did not believe that one man should make slaves of thousands and take their earnings. Neither does Philip."

Novelized by the Author From His Great Play of the Same Name

"Philip! She kept his name."

"She kept his Christian name with the name she assumed. She called him Philip Ames."

"You pumped socialism into him," fumed the millionaire. He added scornfully, "I'll soon change that."

"What I have taught him is little," said the diver quietly, and added, with confidence, "but what life and misery have taught him he can never forget. I tell you he is a man!"

"He is my son—the son of John J. Haggleton—my only son—with great things to do in this world!"

"Exactly! The destiny his mother chose for him!"

"I mean he will have great interests to protect, a great fortune to handle," protested Haggleton, adding contemptuously, "He won't care for your petty theories when he knows who he is!"

At this moment the door of Jenny's room opened, and Philip entered quickly. He gave a careless glance at Haggleton, murmured, "Excuse me a moment," and began to search for something, rummaging in boxes, opening drawers, and grumbling to himself, his back to the two men.

"I wish," he said, half aloud, "that the scoundrel who owns this place had to live in it. I'd like to make him keep in that room. Where the devil is that hammer?"

The moment Philip found the hammer and departed Haggleton said excitedly:

"You need not tell me! I need no proof. I know—the eyes, the chin, especially the eyes! For twenty years I haven't slept without seeing those eyes!"

He started impetuously for the door, but Gentle intercepted him.

"Stop!" he commanded. "Not yet. If you speak to him now, you will regret it."

"He is my son, he is mine! He sails with me on my yacht within an hour!"

Gentle stood before the door with outstretched arms.

"Wait," he continued. "You don't know all yet. Here, read this."

He produced an envelope from his pocket and handed it to Haggleton, who snatched it from him and opened it impatiently. It contained two papers. Haggleton glanced at the first one hastily, then suddenly sat down.

"My God!" he whispered.

"Now you understand how things are between us," said Gentle.

"My wife made this document on her deathbed?"

"With a clear mind. The doctor attested it."

"A copy of the order I gave that night." Haggleton's tone was strangely subdued as he looked at the second paper.

"The original is in a safe place," said Gentle. "Don't offer me money for it," he added warningly. "It is not for sale."

"What are you going to do with it?"

"You would not want Philip to read it?"

"No! A thousand times no!"

"Then I will use it to increase your patience. You must be content, Mr. Haggleton, to see your son and be with him on my terms!"

CHAPTER IV.
FATHER AND SON.

"YOU say that I must be content to see my son and be with him only on your terms?" he asked.

"You understand that you must not make yourself known to him until the moment comes?"

"Yes, but how can I see him or be with him if he doesn't know who I am?"

"That is easy enough. Show an interest in the problems of poverty, tenement house reform, and Philip will spend his days and nights with you."

"No, no," protested Haggleton; "I want him to take an interest in my affairs, which will be his. He cannot begin too soon. And I am going away on my yacht. Time is pressing."

"Philip will be here when you return from your cruise."

"In three months? Ah, you have never had a son! He is going with me on that cruise."

"It cannot be," answered Gentle. "I must put my promise to his mother before your feelings. I have trained him for a battle with you—a great battle that's coming now. And I will see that you start fair."

"Battle—what battle?"

"A battle," continued Gentle impressively, "between your money and his high purpose. You will try to tempt him—I know it. You will try to make him hard and worldly. That's why I have waited until he was a man, his character formed. Even now he's only twenty-six, and—he is your son."

Philip entered at this moment.

"I have been trying to make that room fit for the little kid to sleep in," he said. "It is a pigsty. Oh, that scoundrel Haggleton! Miss Lawrence says the children should both be sent to the hospital."

"I want you to know a friend of mine, Philip," Gentle said—Mr.—Mr. Jackson. Mr. Jackson is interested in tenement house problems."

The young man held out his brawny hand to "Mr. Jackson," who shook it heartily.

"Pleased to meet you, sir. You have struck the right place for tenement problems. This is 'thug block.' The man who owns it is just starting on a cruise in his million dollar yacht."

"You mean Mr. Haggleton?" asked that worthy expectantly.

"Yes—John J. The doctors say he needs a change. I wonder what his tenants need?"

Haggleton looked around the room once more, taking in every evidence of neglect and dirt. Then his glance fell upon the mantelpiece, with two elaborate but grimy timepieces.

"You wonder what John J.'s tenants need?" he said dryly. "I should say that the ones who live here need more soap and not so many marble clocks."

"Philip," said Margaret, half opening the door and looking through it, "where is the cream bottle?"

He handed it to her, closing the door.

Haggleton asked with interest:

"Whom have you got in there?"

"She's a trained nurse and—she's the girl whom I am going to marry."

"Oh, indeed."

Gentle smiled to himself and caught a twinkle in Haggleton's eye. It suddenly made him like the man a little better.

Philip then asked:

"Are you a friend of Mr. Haggleton, Mr. Jackson?" he asked. "Do you know him?"

"Why—er—yes."

"You know him," repeated Philip, half incredulously—"personally, I mean?"

"Mr. Jackson is associated with Mr. Haggleton in business," explained Gentle; "he has been helping him in some schemes for tenement improvement."

offers you an opportunity to invest your savings so that you will be rich in a few years—stop and carefully consider the proposition. Has he no friends who could furnish money for his enterprise? Why does he seek the small investor? It would be well to consult someone who is in a position to know about the true value of this stock. If there is any doubt on any one point, we advise you to leave your money in the bank where you know it will be safe. Almost any scheme can be made to look plausible on its face, but the small investor often wait years for returns only to learn in the end that the company went into the hands of a receiver.

IN an interview with Senator Tuttle, Chairman of Congressman Townsend's executive committee at Lansing Mr. Tuttle said:

"We have noticed with a great deal of interest, the interview with Mr. Worthington of the Burrows Senatorial committee, as reported in several of the state papers, wherein the genial secretary says that 'everything is looking fine for the senator.'

"Of course, we do not blame Mr. Worthington for claiming that conditions are satisfactory. He is in a position to know, however, that they are not.

"He knows as well as we or any one else who has given any thought to the matter that the people are waking up to the fact that they are the ones to say who shall be senator and that they are not satisfied with the way things have been running at Washington; that they haven't much use for Hale, Cannon, Aldrich or any of their lieutenants. He knows that in recognition of this sentiment that exists not only in Michigan but all over the country Senators Hale and Aldrich have announced their retirement. He knows as well as we or any one else that Senator Burrows' friends have became so alarmed that they have had consultations at Detroit and Washington; that they have offered to make a prominent Detroiter their candidate in place of Senator Burrows and that he turned them down hard; that Senator Smith gave them no satisfaction at the Washington conference; and that Senator Burrows hasn't any more chance of winning than as though he were not a candidate.

"Mr. Worthington has as good sources of information as we and must know that there is little sentiment for the senator. Based on reliable reports from every county in the state, a conservative estimate gives Mr. Townsend a majority of 54,500 votes, and we will be greatly disappointed if it does not far exceed this estimate.

"It's all right to be optimistic and reassure your friends, as Mr. Worthington has been doing, but an analysis of the situation does not bear out his statements.

"Congressman Townsend will be in Michigan just as soon as his duties in Washington will permit and will make an active speaking campaign throughout the entire state."

A Bare-faced Fraud.

East Lansing, Mich.,
May 6, 1910.

The law, passed by the last legislature, which obliges manufacturers and dealers in spraying materials to take out permits and requires a written guarantee of the different brands, has helped to keep them up to the standard but an application has been received from a manufacturer in another state for a permit for the sale of a brand called, "Bordeaux Mixture and Paris Green Compound," and the analysis submitted and tests made at the Agricultural College show that it is the rankest kind of a fraud, since it contains neither Paris Green nor Bordeaux Mixture nor, in fact, anything that would take the place of the latter. It consists of hydrated lime and a small per cent. of white arsenic, with a little ultramarine blue to give it a color resembling Bordeaux Mixture.

It is of no value whatever to fungicide, and while it would be of some use as an arsenical, there is great danger of its burning the foliage. Fruit growers and others are cautioned against the use of this compound.

In purchasing spraying materials one should make sure that every original package is labeled so as to show the percentage of the principal ingredients, as well as the net weight or measure of the contents.

East Monday afternoon about thirty W. C. T. U. ladies gathered at the home of Mrs. Jennie Alcox on Antrim street. Mrs. Howard of Petoskey was also a guest of honor, and was surprised to find so many ladies present. Mrs. Howard in a few well chosen words presented Mrs. Alcox with a book of choice quotations as a token of appreciation and love from the union. A pleasant afternoon was spent and a bounteous pot-luck supper was served.

The revival meetings held at the Baptist church every night at 7:30 p. m. are increasing nightly in attendance and interest. J. W. Erskine, the Irish evangelist, is a straightforward, clean and earnest preacher of the old gospel, and preaches it in simplicity and power because he believes it with all his soul. If you like to hear that kind of gospel from an earnest preacher, go every night and you will not regret it. The meetings will continue every night until further notice.

To-day there is not an open saloon between the Straits of Mackinac and the Grand Traverse county line, and 40 counties of the lower peninsula are under prohibition. Those who deal in statistics tells us that 38 per cent of the people of both peninsulas of Michigan (all the counties of the upper peninsula are wet) live in dry territory. The transaction in Elk Rapids from wet to dry was remarkably quiet. Antrim county is dry. Let's forget the past and live only in the present aware that we have no saloons and determined that the law shall be observed.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Grass Stains.—Wet in cold water, cover with cream of tartar and put in the sun, or use alcohol if goods cannot be washed.

Mildew.—If fresh wet in strong suds, cover with paste of salt and soap and put in the sun.

Blood.—Soak in cold water or water and salt. When nearly gone use soap and water or use starch paste.

Wine (red).—Cover with wet salt and wash in hot water.

Machine Oil or Axle Grease.—Cover with lard and wash with soap and cold water. Finish with hot water and soap.

Red Ink.—Ammonia and water, milk or cream or cold water and soap.

How to Make "Bread Boxes."

"Bread boxes" are an artistic, cheap and delicious way to serve many entrees as eggs, chestnuts or greens. They are easy to make, but comparatively few women understand it. Cut stale bread at least two days old in four inch cubes, having first removed the crusts. Dip each cube into slightly beaten egg and fry in boiling lard in a frying basket. Remove when golden brown and drain on brown paper. Cut out a square from one side of the cube a quarter of an inch smaller than the box and dig out the crumb, leaving the sides and bottom about a half inch thick. Before using set the "bread boxes" in a hot oven to heat through, fill with whatever mixture is desired and add the lid or not, as preferred.

How to Freshen Velvet.

To clean a velvet suit sponge the spots with pure alcohol; then suspend the suit on a hanger in the bathroom in such a way that the air can reach all sides of the garment. Turn on the hot water in the tub until the steam fills the room. Shut the door and windows. Shut off the water and let the steam do its work for an hour, but do not touch the garment until it is perfectly dry. You will be surprised at the newness of your suit.

How to Clean Ermine.

First beat and brush out all the dust to clean ermine. Lay the furs upon a clean cloth and with a new perfectly clean sponge wet the ermine down to the skin with grain alcohol. While it is wet sift into it all the boric talcum the fur will hold. Do it quickly, lest the alcohol should evaporate. Shut up in a box for a week, then brush, shake and "dress."

How to Wash Comfortables.

Wet the comfortables, then rub well with naphtha soap, hang on a line and turn the hose on them until the water runs clear. Let them hang until dry, then shake them out, and your comfortables will be light and fluffy, like new ones.

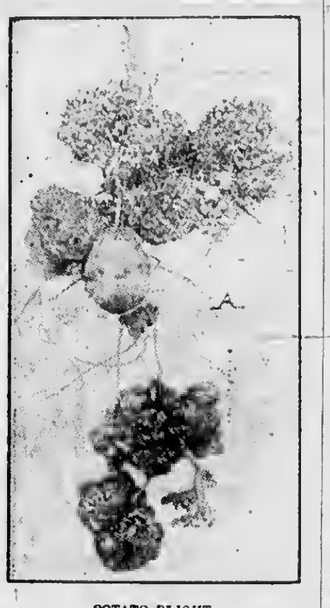
FIGHTING POTATO CANKER.

Canada Sends Warning Dreaded European Scourge Has Crossed Sea.

The serious potato blight known as "black scab," "warty disease" and "potato canker," which has ravaged the potato fields of Europe for thirteen years, has appeared on the American continent, in Newfoundland. Farmers in the United States are warned to look out for it and to make every effort to stamp it out at the first sign of its appearance. The extraordinary rapidity with which the potato canker has spread over nearly the whole of Europe and the virulence of the disease combine to make the Canadian department of agriculture fearful lest the infected seed, imported from across the sea to Newfoundland, should find its way southward and give the canker a foothold on lower Canadian and American soil.

This disease, wherever it is permitted to establish itself, makes the successful cultivation of potatoes extremely difficult. There is said to be no hope of saving a crop that is once attacked. Moreover, when a crop is destroyed by this blight the ground remains infected, so that for at least six years it is impossible to grow a crop of potatoes.



POTATO BLIGHT

Where the disease is prevalent practically no healthy tubers will develop. The tubers, when lifted, show signs of various degrees of injury. Some appear on casual examination to be sound. But the "eyes" of the tubers should be carefully examined. These are the places where the disease is first noticeable. The eyes of affected tubers show an abnormal development of the dormant shoot. A careful untrained observer can easily recognize the presence of the disease in this stage. At the same time it is in this condition that the disease is most likely to escape detection and to be spread by means of infected tubers used for seed. In the earlier stages of the disease the eyes will be found to be slightly protruding in the form of a single or compound group of small nodules varying from the size of a pin's head to that of a pea.

When a grower finds his crop attacked he may hesitate to destroy potatoes which appear sound or but little affected, although total destruction would be the best means of preventing the spread of the disease, yet those tubers may be collected, boiled and be fed to pigs. Under no circumstances should unboiled or decayed potatoes be given as food, not only because the feeding value is sure to be reduced, but mainly because the spores are still capable of germinating after passing through the body of an animal. In removing the potatoes from the field the greatest precaution should be taken to clean thoroughly and disinfect one's boots and the farm carts and implements used.

The process of disinfecting may be carried out on boards laid on the field, so that no reinfection takes place afterward. The grower should then proceed to dig a hole in the field and collect all refuse from the vines and all diseased tubers. The potato straw should be destroyed by fire, but the tubers, being too wet to burn, may be dealt with as follows: The hole that has been dug must be big enough to hold all the tubers collected. It should then be covered with a layer six inches deep of unslaked lime, then a portion of the tubers may be thrown in and covered by another layer of unslaked lime, and so on till the hole is filled. The last layer should be formed, of course, by the lime. In this manner the tubers are put out of harm's way.

Under no circumstances should seed potatoes from a diseased crop be used.

CARE OF ROADSIDES.

Remove All Rubbish and Preserve Trees to Make Highways Attractive.

No matter how smooth and well constructed the traveled road may be, if the roadsides are not cared for the highway as a whole will not give a good impression. All rubbish should be removed, the excavations should be filled and embankments smoothed and planted with grass wherever it will grow. Unsightly brush should be cut and grubbed out. Sometimes, however, the brush and small trees if suitably trimmed add to the attractiveness of the roadside.

All trees which are ornamental or which have value as shade trees should be preserved and protected unless they grow so close together as to make a dense shade. In hot, dry climates particularly and indeed in most places trees are a considerable factor in reducing the cost of maintenance since they lessen the evaporation of the moisture from the macadam. In exposed places, where the sweep of the wind would be otherwise unbroken, they serve to prevent in a measure the blowing away of the binder from the road surface. Unfortunately in such places it is often difficult to make trees grow. Care in the selection of the kinds of trees best suited to the locality is important.

A good arrangement along roadsides for trees with large tops is to set them about fifty feet apart on each side, but alternating, so that there will be a tree every twenty-five feet along the road.

HELPING RURAL CARRIER.

Good Roads Can Shorten His Work and He Can Serve More Patrons.

The man who brings your papers and letters to you more regularly than you could go to town after them, minding not the rain or other inclemencies, deserves good roads that he may shorten his work or serve more patrons.

Much road building is neglected till late fall because the farmers think that this is the only season in which they have time for such work. Very often this work is wasted because it has not time to acquire permanence. There are, however, a number of road repairs which may be done to very great advantage at this time. The ruts may be filled, the bridges reenforced, all culverts cleaned out, ditches deepened or straightened out, the split log drag used after rains. Besides helping the carrier, all work done on the road redounds to the advantage of the farmer, enabling him to carry bigger loads to town in shorter time.

Wherever there is any rubbish that would cause snowdrifts for the carrier to wade or drive through in reaching the box it should be removed. The mail boxes should be so placed that unnecessary straining or reaching is avoided.

The mail carrier can always tell you where the roads need working.

Confessions.

The woman begged the bachelor girl not to go yet awhile. She was so urgent that the girl finally sat down again. Then the two sat perfectly still and silent, looking at each other.

"I know what you are thinking," said the bachelor girl by and by.

"What?" asked the woman.

"That, now you've got me to stay you wonder why it was you insisted so. You don't know what to do with me or to say to me, now I'm here to stay."

"How did you guess it?" the woman laughed.

"I've felt just that way myself," said the bachelor girl, "many and many a time."—New York Press.

A Bad Hole to Get Into.

A gentleman was going round a strange golf course with a local caddie, and after playing part of the way he pointed to a rather high wall at inquired, "Is there a hole over there?"

"Yes, sir," replied the caddie solemnly; "there's the cemetery over there. Don't put yourself into a hole there if you can help it."—London Scraps.

The collector of internal revenue has made public the corporation tax totals for the various collection districts of the country and Michigan's contribution thereto was $779,880,031. Of this amount $500,291.32 came from the eastern district and $18,929.37 from the so-called fourth or western district of the state.

In the eastern district 3,503 concerns filed returns and paid taxes, and in the western district there were 2,165. A total penalty tax of $6,031.92 was collected in the state. A false return involves a penalty of ten per cent and neglect or refusal to make returns a penalty of fifty per cent of the taxes as originally levied.

The western part of Michigan was considerably more careless about incurring penalty than the eastern, the western district paying $1,721.94 of the state's punishment, while the eastern district paid but $1,309.98.

The state board of correction and charities has adopted a new rule relative to county jails, under which all new buildings of this character must provide for classification of prisoners. The law requires that the plans for all jails and county infirmaries must be approved by the board. Previously it has been the custom to approve all reasonable plans, but since Secretary Murry has been making his annual inspection of jails and infirmaries, he has discovered that all of them lack facilities to seperate hoboes, drunks, convicted men and men awaiting trial from each other. All have to go into a common ward.

Under the new rule new jails must provide quarters for men awaiting trial segregate from those in which other classes are confined which the board believes is only justice to these men who have not been convicted of any offense. Plans have been before the board recently for a new county jail in Montcalm county. These plans showed two blocks of cells facing on a common alley way and the board has requested that the plan be changed to conform to the new rule adopted.

The canning factory is by no means a dead proposition. Secretary Carver of the Citizens' Association is receiving numerous letters from canners inquiring what we want to do for a cannery, and he is getting to the point where he replies asking the parties to state what they want and we will consider their proposition. One party at Ludington has been writing about two letters a day for the past two weeks. The objection raised by most parties so far, has been that we cannot supply a sufficient quantity of small fruit. The forepart of the week Mr. Carver received a letter from one of the parties who lately visited Elk Rapids in which he says that he has lately visited about all the towns in the fruit belt not provided with canneries, and that he thinks more favorably of this place than any that he has visited, and he adds that if we have not yet closed for a canning factory he will return here at once and put in a plant and run this season on apples and cherries. It is a pretty safe prediction that Elk Rapids canned fruit will be on the market before the close of the season.—Progress.

After reading the public statement of this fellow-sufferer given below, you must come to this conclusion: A remedy which cured years ago, which has kept the kidneys in good health since, can be relied upon to perform the same work in other cases. Read this.

Mrs. G. Wikel, 303 S. Elmwood Ave., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Kidney complaint clung to me for a long time and made my life miserable. My limbs and joints were sore and I had all the aches and pains that generally accompany a bad case of kidney trouble. Finally after trying several prescriptions and Remedies without being helped to any extent, I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They benefited me at once and before long had effected a complete cure. I know from experience that Doan's Kidney Pills act just as represented."

THE RELIEF PROVED PERMANENT.

On Aug. 1906, Mrs. Wikel was interviewed and she added to the above: "I have had no occasion to take a kidney remedy since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me. You are at liberty to continue the publication of the testimonial I have previously given in their favor."

How One House Is Protected

"There is a house in the middle west where a simple but effective fire fighting system is installed," says Charles R. Barnes in Woman's Home Companion for May. "The house has a basement and three floors. On the third floor four tin pails filled with water are placed inconspicuously in positions known to every member of the household. There is a water pipe to that floor, and to it a hose is connected. Every room can be reached by this hose. Should a fire break out there would be four pailfuls of water ready to throw against it while the faucet was being turned on to make the hose effective. The same idea prevails on the second floor, the water-pails being located in closets and under window-seats. On the ground floor there are more pails and more hose.

"The family also maintains a spasmodic fire-drill which, while it is of a helter-skelter nature, would prove none the less effective. In order to test it, an unbelieving uncle built a smudge in a coal-bucket down in the basement just before dinner one evening, and then awaited results. They were not long in coming. Somebody smelled smoke, and the next instant all hands were tracing it. When it was finally located in the basement the head of the house was plunging into it with the first-floor hose, the two daughters were on hand with pailfuls of water. The son was poking the outdoor hose through a window, while the mother had a fine start at getting the fire department on the telephone. Had that alarm been a real one, the fire would have had no chance at all.

"This house has no fire-escapes on outside walls, there are stout ropes on each of the two upper floors that are long enough to reach from a window to the ground. The one on the third floor is in the room of a servant, who is the only occupant of that floor. Should a fire break out, and she be cut off from escape by way of the stairs, she would not have to wait the arrival of the department with ladders."

Sense of Danger.

Dr. Wahle of London holds that people should develop a sixth sense to inform them of the approach of danger in the streets. Lafcadio Hearn once said: "While in a crowd I seldom look at faces. My intuition is almost infallible, like that blind faculty by which in absolute darkness one becomes aware of the proximity of bulky objects without touching them. If I hesitate to obey it a collision is the inevitable consequence. What pilots one quickly and safely through a thick press is not conscious observation at all, but unreasoning intuitive perception."

A Sight Worth Paying For.

"I'd like to tell Mr. Haggleton a few things about tenement improvement!" the young man burst out.

"What, for instance?" asked the pseudo Mr. Jackson.

"I'd tell him," he vociferated, "that he owns blocks and blocks on the lower east side that are in such a lovely state that he might as well be running a factory for turning out"—

Gentle made a restraining movement, checking Philip, who ended impatiently:

"Oh, what's the use?"

"No! go on," urged Haggleton. "I am here to learn. You said 'factory for turning out'—what?"

"Thieves and drunkards and wrecks of women!" thundered Philip. He clinched his fists and shook them above his head:

"My God! Why cannot you rich men be decent?"

"I suppose reformers care nothing about money?" said Haggleton sarcastically.

"Even reformers have to live."

"Listen to me, young man," Haggleton was in grim earnest now. "There isn't a reformer in this country who wouldn't stop reforming d——d quick if he found it was hurting his pocketbook."

Philip flared up again.

"That's false!" he shouted. "Besides, it has nothing to do with the question. The question is, Where do you get your money, you rich men? Do you earn it? Do you dig it out of the ground? No. You get it by the toil of men, by the tears of women and children. You get it by grinding human beings down to starvation wages and taking the rest, millions and millions that belong to the workers, but go into your fat pocketbooks because you're strong and cruel enough to take it, and that's how you get such places as 'lung block' and such monsters as John J. Haggleton."

Haggleton's secretary, a man of middle age, stuck in his head.

"Pardon me," he said. "Mr. Haggleton, you've only a few minutes if you want to sail with this tide."

Haggleton hardly raised his voice, his face barely changed, as he bit out the words:

"When I want you I'll send for you, Grimes."

The man retired hastily. Gentle looked uneasy. But Philip's next words recalled him to the new turn affairs had suddenly taken.

"Are you," said the young man in blank amazement—"are you John J. Haggleton?"

"That's my name."

"But"—he turned in bewilderment to Gentle—"did you think that his name was Jackson?"

"No, Philip. But there was a reason for introducing Mr. Haggleton in that way."

"A very simple reason," Haggleton explained smoothly. "I want to study tenement conditions without newspaper notoriety. Now go on with what you were saying. And, mind you, continue to be frank. I am here to learn."

"I will be frank, Mr. Haggleton. My answer to you is, What's the use? You can't settle the problems of poverty while your yacht waits."

"I can give certain orders, can't I? I can authorize certain improvements. Talk quick."

But Philip only shook his head.

"That's the way with you rich people," he commented in deep disparagement. "You think that you can settle anything and everything by signing a check. Well, Mr. Haggleton, that is your great mistake of all of you.—You can't do it. The only real help for the poor comes through love, and you cannot pay some one to love for you. You might as well pay some one to eat for you, or breathe for you, or sleep for you."

The young man waited for a moment as if searching his mind for a closing argument. Then with a flash of inspiration he concluded:

"You've got to do your loving yourself."

Haggleton started, looked at him intently, shifted his gaze to Gentle's face and repeated thoughtfully, slowly:

"You've got to do your loving yourself. I never thought of that."

Haggleton paused, then went on:

"A man with the right stuff in him can win out against poverty just as well today as he ever could."

"A man like Moran?" Philip's voice was incredulous.

"Who is Moran?" asked Haggleton.

"Your tenant here."

"He had a small oil business in the west," explained Gentle. "Your system absorbed it. Now he's a baker's assistant."

Haggleton got up again and walked around the room.

"Moran can't be much good if this is the way he keeps his place."

"He's half sick." Philip was impatient now.

"So am I half sick, and more than half. I have been half sick for twenty years. Upon my word, I believe that half the work of the world is done by men who are half sick."

Then he asked briefly:

"How much does Moran earn?"

"Nine dollars a week."

Haggleton made another turn of the room.

"If I only had time," he muttered to himself. And he added, lower still, "I'll have to do my loving myself."

The thought had found its conclusion in the millionaire's brain.

"See here," said Haggleton briskly, squaring his shoulders, tightening his jaw and assuming a combative attitude—"see here, you two. Are you willing to let me prove my contention in my own way?"

"That a man with the right stuff in him can win out against poverty just as well today as he ever could—is that what you mean?" asked Philip.

"Yes."

"I am willing," said Gentle significantly.

Haggleton nodded emphatically.

"I don't quite understand," Philip began cautiously.

"Get me some paper. I am going to send orders to the captain of my yacht—that he sail at once, as arranged, only I shall not be on board."

"He is to sail without you?"

"Without me, and he is to keep away from wireless telegraph apparatus, ports of call, yacht club stations. He is to have no communication with any one if possible. You understand me, Mr. Gentle?"

"I think I do, Mr. Haggleton."

"I impose secrecy on both of you," continued Haggleton, now blazing with energy.

"Then you are not going on the yacht?" hazarded Philip.

"No, my young reforming friend. I am going to stay here. I am going to win a little bet I have made with your friend, Mr. Gentle. And I am going to show you what John J. Haggleton would do if he had to hustle in a tenement without a dollar."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THERE WAS NO ACCIDENT.

And the Message She Received Was Not a Practical Joke.

She was reclining in a low chair in the drawing room, thinking about her dear Willie, who had been legally her property for the space of three months, when a telegram arrived for her. Hurriedly tearing open the envelope, she scanned the contents, then fell back in a swoon. The message was from her brother in the city and read:

Will run over today. GEORGE.

Her maid at last restored her to consciousness. Her Willie run over! She could not grasp the full significance of it. One thing she would do—go to him at once. So she hastily attired herself and at length reached her brother's office, who, having sent the news, would be able to tell her all about it.

"How is he, and where have they taken him?"

Her brother stared at her stupidly.

"Oh, don't keep me in suspense! Tell me where he is."

"Where who is?"

"Why, Willie."

"At his office, I presume. I haven't seen him today."

"Then what does this mean? Isn't he run over? Is this one of your silly jokes?"

George took the telegram from his sister, read his own message, then exploded with laughter. It was a long time before he could convince her that this simple intimation that he would run over and pay her a visit was not a detestable and practical joke.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Talker.

You'll note the man who talks too much is always working round. He never seems to hold the job which some one else has found for him because he's bound to keep his tongue upon the wag and spend his boss' precious time in self bouquets and brags. He stays until his story's told and then told once again, and by this time the boss' ear is overfull of pabi, and he is told to take his grip, although the boss feels sad, because he's lost his other grip upon the job he had. And yet he never, never learns, but talks his jobs away, because the habit grows on him that he must have his say. And so he talks until he dies, up to his waning breath; he's talked himself to death.—Boston Herald

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" should not be construed as a Scriptural excuse for a fellow failing to look ahead in testing his seed corn. Rather should one be guided by that secular admonition, "The Lord helps those who help themselves."

"ANOTHER'S SHOES."

A Phrase That Had Its Origin in an Ancient Custom.

The expression "stepping into another's shoes," like many another common phrase, had its origin in an ancient custom.

The old Norse law required that a person to be adopted must step into a previously prepared shoe. This shoe was made from the skin taken from the right hind leg of a "three-winters-old bull."

The skin was flayed from above the hock, and out of this the shoe was made. The person to be adopted stepped into this shoe, taking into his arms one at a time, it is presumed, the younger sons of the man making the adoption. If there were also sons who were of age they stepped into the shoe afterward, by this sign showing their consent to the adoption.

A man in this way could adopt an illegitimate son, making him his lawful heir, but in that case the father was obliged to step into the shoe first. If there were any full grown sons, they stepped into the shoe afterward; if there were no full grown sons, then the next of kin did the stepping, and without his consent, by the way, this special adoption could not be made.

Witnesses to the ceremony in the use of the shoe were required to establish its legality.

It will be seen that this was considered an important ceremony, and since so much "shoe stepping" was done it is not strange that the expression as now used passed into common speech.—Chicago Record-Herald.

OSTRICH BATTLES.

The Great Birds, as Strong as Horses, Box With Their Feet.

Ostriches battle for supremacy with as much ferocity as stags, bulls, buffaloes and other animals. An ostrich fight is amusing, inasmuch as it amounts practically to a boxing match with the feet, wherein the combatants lightly dance around each other.

There is, however, this difference—if any human boxer could hit as hard with his hands as can an ostrich with its feet the championship would be decided by a single blow. In sparring the ostrich stands on one foot, with the other foot and the wings raised, the bill wide open and the neck distended. He strikes with the force of a trip hammer.

Sometimes on an ostrich farm a keeper will become involved in such a mixup, in which event it is not infrequently the case that the human emerges from the scrap with a broken leg, arm or head.

Under modern training an ostrich equals a horse in power and indeed can perform many of the "stunts" whereof his equine colleague is capable. In one respect, however, he excels the horse, for by the aid of its wings the ostrich can leave behind the swiftest running thoroughbred. In harness an ostrich has at Hot Springs, Ark., paced in about a horse's time.—Harper's Weekly.

His Unlucky Day.

Even the least superstitious are often struck by the misfortunes which attend some persons on certain dates. A large firm in the city has in its employ a living instance of the fact. On June 12 an employee lost his left arm by coming in contact with machinery. The accident disabled him for his then employment, and he was given that of a messenger. On another June 12 he was run over in the Strand while on an errand. Result, a broken leg. The next accident was a fall on the stairs in the firm's buildings—again June 12—the right arm broken this time. The fourth mishap on another anniversary broke three ribs. The firm took the case into consideration and issued an order that in future the employee was to take a holiday on that date, an order with which he has now complied for several years.—London Chronicle.

His Second Thought.

A politician named Blank got a place for a clerk during one of the sessions of the legislature of his state. The clerk was very grateful, says the Saturday Evening Post. At the end of the session he came around to Blank and said: "Mr. Blank, I want to tell you how much I am indebted to you for your kindness in getting me the place I have had. It meant more to me, Mr. Blank, than you may think. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. Also I want to say, Mr. Blank that if there ever comes a time when I can do anything for you—anything at all—you are to command me. I will do anything you may ask me to do. I am at your service."

Blank thanked the man, and he started to go. As he reached the door he turned and said, "Of course, Mr. Blank, I would prefer that it should be something honorable."

Took It Back.

"I give you my word, the next person who interrupts the proceedings," said the judge sternly, "will be expelled from the courtroom and ordered home."

"Hooray!" cried the prisoner.

Then the judge pondered.—Judge.

Under head of suggestions for good of order the members suggested that they hold a bee to prepare Mrs. Godfrey's land for the spring crops.

The president of the ladies' auxiliary announced that the next meeting would be held with Mrs. Prudence Smith, Wednesday afternoon, May 25.

TIPS TO HIGHWAY USERS.

Engineer's Novel Method For Keeping Roads In Good Condition.

A novel and unusual method of calling attention to the proper way in which to use a good road was recently put in operation by State Highway Engineer A. N. Johnson of Illinois. It consists of a card bearing the following legend:

HOW TO KEEP THIS ROAD FOR YEARS.

This road was constructed for your use.

Don't drive in one track. Avoid making ruts.

If all use one place all the wear will be in one place and make a rut.

If you use a little care and do not drive exactly where the last wagon did the wear will be distributed, which will keep the surface smooth and the road will remain good for years; otherwise it will soon be rutted and the smooth surface gone.

The cards are 3¼ by 5½ inches in size and are given to the men in charge of road work for distribution to passersby. This calls direct attention to the subject and seems to be more effective than placards tacked at the side of the road. Instead of a hasty glance in passing, the patrons of the roads put the cards in their pockets to be reread and given more mature consideration.

Multimillionaire Road Supervisors.

San Diego county, Cal., boasts the only multimillionaire board of road supervisors in the United States, according to Director Logan W. Page of the public roads division of the department of agriculture, who says:

"San Diego county has a lot of wealthy residents. Most of them own automobiles, and there was a lot of kicking about the rough roads. Among the kickers were Al G. Spalding, who made his millions manufacturing baseballs; Claus Spreckels, Jr., whose father accumulated a bank roll that would choke a railway tunnel, and E. M. Scripps, who owns newspapers all over the central west. The road commissioners grew tired of the growls and appointed a board of roadway supervisors composed of the three gentlemen I have mentioned. The malcontents agreed to serve without pay. Today they are spending $1,250,000 in the county. It doesn't make any difference to them what it costs to build a road. If the county hasn't the money they donate it. Mr. Spalding built nine miles of as fine road as I have ever driven over and Mr. Spreckels twenty."

Tomorrow is not elastic enough in which to press the neglected duties of today.

PRINTER'S INK DOES THE BUSINESS

For the Fruit Growers of Oregon and Washington

HOW ORGANIZATION HELPS THEM

Interesting Letter From A. R. Struthers

Two Organizations are Formed—One of Crowers and One to Market and Advertise Product.

Beverton, Oregon, May, 1910.
Editor COURIER,
Charlevoix, Mich.

When I wrote to you last I promised to look into the method pursued by the fruit growers of the north west which I will call Hood River, but that means White Salmon, Bellingham, Chihalin in Washington, Hood River, Seappoose, Unqua valley, Rouge river valley and others of lesser note in Oregon. The first thing after their trees began to bear they found they had no satisfactory market so they formed a fruit grower's association and this was open only to those engaged in fruit growing and they must take one hundred dollars or more stock in it. Those who do not make fruit growing a business are not eligible.

Then they formed another association to handle the commercial side of the business. Their business is to hunt a market and they done their share so well that Hood River apples are selling here on the trees for more money per box, about forty pounds, than Michigan apples bring per barrel delivered in New York, and it is acknowledged freely here that Michigan apples have a better flavor than any that they can raise here, but they claim that their fruit is a better color, larger and keep better than Michigan fruit. The way they managed to sell their fruit so well, they looked for a place where good fruit was wanted and where they were willing to pay for what they wanted. They found in New York and London, England, just what they wanted.

Then they used printer's ink, got up a subscription, the non-fruit growers were not excluded from subscribing, and flooded New York and London with circulars extolling the grand qualities of Hood river fruit and opened an exhibit of the best specimens of each variety, that has been kept open ever since, summer and winter, and as soon as a box begins to show age it is replaced by another from cold storage. In this way they hold their market which they got by liberal advertising, they shipped fruit just as represented, honest packing and making good in every way. They pack their fruits as near of a size and color and all perfect fruit, the same all through the box as it is on top, so when a man buys a box of number one Hood river apples, he knows he is getting just what he is paying for. The seconds are the next size smaller but all perfect, so that the seconds are nearly as good as the first. If a man goes to Hood river and buys land intending to raise fruit the first thing he does is to join the association then they will send an expert to look over his land, give him directions how to prepare his land; what varieties to plant The trees are furnished through the association. They confine themselves to a few varieties such as Spitzenburg, Baldwin, Winter Banana and a very few other hardy trees. Orinco, Blacktwig and Yellow Newton tender trees at the fruit show here last fall. The Spitzberg, Baldwin and Yellow Newton were ten to one in the number of boxes on exhibition, while there was only one box of Winter Bananas in the room. The dealers tell me that these four are the best sellers they have in winter apples.

Duchess of Oldenburg lead in fall apples, then all through the growing season he has expert advice, as to how to thin the fruit, spray and how to cultivate, irrigate and fertilize. Every step a tender foot takes he is under the care of a man that knows how so that very few fail who are willing to learn. All this is possible where the business is concentrated. It would not work well where there is only one man here and there scattered over a county. It would take too long for an expert to get around and some would be neglected altogether.

The land they raise fruit on is as a general thing to hilly to be good for anything else though there are many orchards on level land. I went up the Columbia river last fall and when we got where the river runs through the mountains the bank rose at least 1500 feet high on each side and at one place we saw a house and orchard on top of a mountain. It was at least fifteen hundred feet above the river and did not look to be more than one hundred feet back from the precipice straight up and down. What a job for a woman with a small family living there would have. She would have to shut them up in a pen. Up the river from Portland to Dallas is the most picturesque trip there is east of the Rockies. Small streams came tumbling down over the rocks a thousand feet at a jump. One place they call Horse Tail Falls, the water falls 700 feet clear of the rocks, another the Bridal Vail, the water comes foaming down ten or twelve feet wide and 700 at a jump. At Hood River you are in eastern Oregon in the east foot hills of the Cascade mountains and there are orchards planted on hills there that we would not consider worth much but here it is called their best fruit land and worth anywhere from $50 to $1000 or more an acre. We can raise just as good fruit there in Charlevoix as they can here only we have to conform ourselves to hardy varieties.

WEST MICH. DEVELOPMENT BUREAU

Payton Appointed Member of Executive Committee

Will Make Big Exhibit at the Land Show—The Work of Collecting Same to Commence at Once.

The meeting of the directors of the Western Michigan Development bureau held Wednesday afternoon, for the election of officers, was well attended and harmonious, although much that was of interest to the bureau was discussed at length.

The big exhibit to given in Chicago next fall came up for quite a general discussion, it being the concensus of opinion that the work of collecting exhibits had not been systematically done. The question of paying for the exhibits came up, one of the members stating that one of two things had to be done to get exhibits, pay for them or go after them. To pay for them, however, it was said, would be a bad precedent, as there were other exhibits to follow.

It was moved and supported that the secretary draft a letter giving details as to the proceedings necessary to the growing of premiums.

A communication from Louis P. Haight, of Muskegon, who, on account of the illness of his wife, was unable to be present, was read, also the communication which had been presented by Mr. Haight at a winter meeting in regard to the reclamation of the pine lands of the state, in which he offered to conduct an experimental station, in connection with the bureau. A general discussion followed the reading of this communication.

Secretary John I. Gibson stated that he would give $10 to any one that would suggest a name that will take the place of "Jack Pine Lands," and "Sand Barrens."

The following appointments were made by the chair, following the election:

Executive committee—President D. H. Day, First vice-president L. F. Perkett, Treasurer B. R. Hendel, F. A. Mitchell, of Manistee; H. J. Gray of Grand Rapids, R. F. Church, of Chicago, D. S. Payton of Charlevoix; E. C. Rust of Pellston, Louis, P. Haight, of Muskegon; and George Blass of Baldwin.

Auditing committee—F. A. Mitchell and C. N. Russel both of Magistee.

Statistical committee—C. P. Buck, Traverse City; Joseph Greacen, Kalkaska, A. L. Denel, Harbor Springs.

Printing committee—John I. Gibson, T. M. Sawyer, of Ludington, R. F. Church.

Membership committee—G. M. Dame, Northport; G. A. Brigham, Buckley; J. D. Hart.

Advisory committee—W. C. Radcliffe, of the Pere Marquette, C. L. Rockwood, G. R. & I.; and S. S. Thorp of Cadillac.

The executive committee voted to spend $100 in advertising the fact that literature can be had upon application at the local office. This money is to be spent in advertising through the medium of the papers published in these sections from which immigration can reasonably be expected.

The contract for 1,760 feet of floor space in the Coliseum for the big exhibit next fall, was also signed up, and the kind of display to be had this year was also discussed, the errors of last year to be avoided at the coming exposition. L. F. Perkett was made a committee of one to commence work at once on the problem of getting apples for the big apple display. Mr. Perkett to write to the fruit growers at once and arrange for extra good fruit for this exhibit.

Arrangements were made for the distribution of booklets which are now on hand, and the matter of having a fruit exhibit in the depot at Grand Rapids, was also considered. Those in attendance at the executive committee meeting were President D. H. Day, of Glen Haven; L. F. Perkett, Traverse City; E. A. Mitchell, Manistee; Hugh J. Gray, Grand Rapids; R. F. Church, Chicago; E. C. Rust, Pellston; George Blass, of Baldwin; and John I. Gibson, secretary; C. R. Hendel of Manistee; and D. S. Payton of Charlevoix did not remain for the meeting.

FRUIT GROWER'S MEETING

Will be Held in this City Tuesday, June Seventh.

The regular monthly meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association will be held in Charlevoix on Tuesday, June 7th, 1910, at 1:00 p. m.

The general subject for the afternoon will be pruning, spraying and thinning, but perhaps the most valuable part of the meeting will be an address given by J. I. Gibson secretary of the West Michigan Development Bureau.

Mr. Gibson will address the meeting on the subject of fruit raising and the fruit growers of the county should be on hand with a long list of questions.

Every member of the society should be present.

If you are not a member we invite you to come and become a member.

NORTH MICHIGAN TRACK MEET

The entire city was pained to learn of the death of our honored and revered citizen, Major E. H Green, who for so many years has been prominent in business and social life among us.

It is therefore requested that all business houses close from ten o'clock until noon on Friday, May 27th, during the obsequies, and that as many as possible pay their individual tribute to the dead by attending the services.

New Clothing Store.

Meyer M. Cohen has been in the east the past week buying clothing, gent's furnishings and shoes and will open up for business on Saturday, May 28th, in the Fagan building under the name of the Palace Clothing Store.

Talking with the editor of this paper Mr. Cohen said, "I intend to carry the highest grades of goods that can be gotten and give the people merchandise that will build a reputation for the store and bring them back again when they want first-class and strictly up-to-date goods. Every garment that leaves the store will be strictly guaranteed and if anything goes wrong with the garment we will consider it a favor if the purchaser will return same and get a new garment in return or their money, just as they choose, but I do not think anything will be brought back on that account.

As I said before I will carry the highest class of goods—no cheap stuff will be brought into the store. If people want swell, nobby stuff they can find it at the Palace Clothing Store and when they are wearing clothing that came from the Palace Clothing Store they can feel that they are dressed as well as the city chaps are."

MAJOR E. H. GREEN IS NO MORE

Died at His Home Monday Afternoon, May 23

CHARLEVOIX'S BEST LOVED CITIZEN

Was Prominent in all the Different Walks of Life

Soldier, Professional Man, Legislator, Public Official.—First Attorney to Practice in Charlevoix County.

Monday afternoon the citizens of Charlevoix were shocked to hear that their best loved citizen, Major E. H. Green, was no more, having passed away at his home on Bridge street, at 2:15 o'clock. Last winter the Major had a severe attack of sickness but had so far recovered as to be able to attend to his business until last week when he was again stricken.

Edward H. Green was born in Maytown, Pennsylvania, October 31, 1831, and secured his education in the common schools of that state and the Pennsylvania State Normal School, after which he followed the profession of teaching until the breaking out of the Civil War when he was one of the first to respond to the call for volunteers, enlisting April 19, 1861, for three months in Co. A., 10th Pennsylvania Infantry.

At the expiration of his term he re-enlisted in Co. E., 107 Pennsylvania Infantry. In 1862 he was wounded at the Battle of Bull Run and after recovery was commissioned captain of Co. H. of the same regiment for bravery on the field of battle He was wounded a second time at the battle of Spottsylvania Court House.

In 1864 he was captured and was confined in Libby and other prisons for ten months, being exchanged with other Union Officers in February 1865. March 14, he was commissioned Major and was honorably discharged from the service July 13, 1865, at the close of the war.

In 1866 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1868 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and immediately came to Charlevoix and entered upon the practice of his profession.

In politics Major Green was always an advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and had served the county as treasurer, prosecuting attorney and circuit court commissioner and was representative on the state legislature from this district in 1873-5, and for four years was deputy collector of customs of this port.

In a fraternal way he was a charter member of Baxter Post, G. A. R. and was also a member of the Military Order of Loyal Legion, and the different branches of the Masonic order, in all of which he took an active part. He was also a member of Christ Episcopal church of this city, which he had long served as warden.

Major Green was the father of five children, all of whom, with his widow, survive him: Fred M., Margaret L., Mrs. A. J. Garrietz, Miss Edna Sue and Guy.

IMPROVED OIL CAN.

Designed to Provide a Greatly Increased Oil Flow.

The oil can illustrated in the accompanying engraving belongs to the class embodying a flexible bottom which is operable to cause a flow of oil. The construction here shown, however, is arranged to provide a considerably greater flow of oil than is obtainable in cans of the conventional construction. This result is secured by providing three diaphragms in the can, one of which serves as the bottom of the can, while the other two are connected at the center by a nipple. In this manner an oil chamber separate from the main portion of the can is formed.

In the accompanying engraving the can is shown at A with the usual nozzle, B, threaded into the upper end fitted into the lower end of the can is a retaining ring, C, which has extending flanges at the upper and lower ends and is also bent outwardly at the lower end to fit against a shoulder formed in the can body. The dished diaphragms D and E bear against the flanges of the retaining ring. The two diaphragms D and E are connected at the center by a nipple. The diaphragm or bottom F is soldered fast to the can body. An oil chamber is thus formed between diaphragms F and E.

In operation when the bottom of the can is pressed inward it drives the oil from the oil chamber with greater pressure than would be the case if the entire can body formed a single oil vessel. At the same time the other two diaphragms yield as well, thus effecting a large discharge of oil. Frederick G. Svetlik of Cadott, Wis., has recently secured a patent on this improved oil can.

DEW AS A BEVERAGE.

Method of Securing Potable Water at Gibraltar.

Hitherto dew has been used as a beverage only in poetry, by the sun flowers and butterflies. It has recently been robbed of all its poetic character by being used for the refreshment of English soldiers. The English administration at Gibraltar, where water is very scarce, now collects dew by the following very simple method.

A large pit is dug in the earth and covered with dry wood or straw, which, in turn, is covered either with earth or with sheet iron. The straw or wood serves as a heat insulator and effectually prevents the conduction of heat from the ground to the layer of earth or the sheet iron above.

Consequently this earth of iron cools after sunset much more rapidly than the ground, so that its temperature soon falls below the dew point of the surrounding air. Hence dew is formed upon the iron or the layer of earth in very large quantities. The water thus obtained is drained off into reservoirs and after clarification is used for drinking.

A Perfect Solder.

What is declared to be a perfect solder is the new mixture of uranium and tellurium, which will practically compose a solid joint between two metals. In modern electric street railway systems the absence of a solid joint causes millions to be spent annually in connecting rails by wires. Numerous attempts have been made with other solders to form a continuous rail out of the ordinary steel rail. All these attempts have proved failures. Now comes the assertion that uranium and tellurium in certain proportions will form an absolutely perfect union from a metallic standpoint when put between two steel rails. The rarity and costliness of the two metals involved in the new composition rob the discovery of much of its present utility, but it can still be used at many points where, in delicate machinery, a solid joint is highly to be desired.

Improving Diamonds.

That diamonds may be artificially colored is asserted by M. Sarcodnto, who has submitted to the Academy of Sciences an account of experiments he has conducted. He has proved that a diamond exposed to the action of cathodic rays takes on a beautiful and delicate rose tint. Should one continue to expose the diamond to these rays, especially those obtained from the negative pole of the galvanic battery, the color of the gem goes on purifying until it becomes as delicate and fresh as a dairymaid's cheek. Still further exposure to the rays gives it the color of red Madeira wine. Academicians declare the process actually increases the value of the diamond threefold. Furthermore, it has been demonstrated that the tints thus obtained cannot be removed short of that degree of heat.

New Tinning Machine.

A machine for tinning copper articles has been perfected by Patrick H. Dunn of Rome, N. Y., after several years' work. Up to the present time, however, no public exhibition of the machine has been allowed. By its aid copper cooking utensils, boilers, tea and coffee pots, etc., have the surface coated with tin, the tin being put on one side of the copper while it is in sheet form. The work heretofore has been done by hand, which is very expensive, as it takes two men and a boy ten hours to tin 4,000 square feet. In the same length of time the Dunn machine, tended by three men, will perfectly tin 28,000 square feet of copper.

Secretary Knox For Good Roads.

Secretary Knox believes that the congestion of population in great cities is caused in large part by the lack of good roads in this country. He told the house committee on foreign affairs that the reason France is the richest agricultural country in the world is because she has had good roads so long. He said: "The agricultural population of France does not have to spend its money in repairing vehicles and their harness every winter. I think it has improved the attractiveness of rural life. I think it has caused the population to remain on the soil more than in any other country. You do not find that tendency to urban population in France and England that you do in this country."

Use of a Drag on Gravelly Roads.

In soils full of loose stones or even small bowlders the drag has done good service. The loose stones are drawn into a windrow down the center of the road, while the earth is deposited around the bowlders in such a way that the surface is leveled. The loose stones in the center of the road should of course be removed. Where there is a large proportion of small stones or gravel the drag will keep down the inequalities in the surface.

CHAPTER V.

HAGGLETON AT WORK

"I WILL start fair," said Haggleton briefly to Gentle. "I will keep nothing but the clothes I stand in—cost $2. That's what I started with the first time. Moran started with more than that. Two dollars will suffice for me. My clothes I can sell and buy a suit more fitting for a penniless man looking for a job. The difference in price I will add to my capital. You will have to explain me to Moran and make him take me as a boarder. I am Mr. Jackson, a small business man ruined by the trust."

Then he added to Philip:

"Call my secretary."

The man entered hastily.

"I wish to be alone with Mr. Grimes for a few moments."

Philip and Gentle withdrew.

"Sit down," muttered Haggleton.

Grimes looked at his watch. "The yacht was to sail in twenty minutes," he remonstrated. "You will lose the tide."

"I'm not going on the yacht."

"Ah! Then I'm to countermand the sailing orders?"

"I mean that the yacht goes, but I stay here—here in this tenement. I'm going to live here."

"Am I to sail on the yacht?"

"Of course. You will take my orders and see that they are executed. I shall write a note for the captain, telling him to carry out exactly the instructions already agreed upon."

"For a three months' cruise?"

"Yes. See to it that the news does not get out that I am not on board. Down here there's not one chance in a thousand that I will be discovered, and—Grimes, I have another reason for wanting every one to think me aboard the yacht."

"Another reason besides—besides your son?"

"Yes. You know how Bates went off yesterday. He hates me—hates me—and he'll pay up somehow, but he'll never stop fighting. Grimes, as soon as those fellows know I'm away they'll start some new deviltry against me, and"—he leaned forward—"it might be amusing and profitable to be right here in Manhattan watching them."

Haggleton opened the door.

"Come in, please," he called.

Gentle and Philip entered.

The old man sat at the bare wooden table and rapidly wrote his instructions. Then he sealed them and addressed the envelope. "There; I think that's all," he concluded, giving it to Grimes, who departed.

A remarkable change had come over Haggleton. His eyes were alert, his face firm, but good natured. He seemed pleased with himself and with things in general. Philip observed this with surprise.

Haggleton looked Philip straight in the eyes.

"I have told you that I am going to show you what John J. Haggleton would do if he had to hustle in a tenement."

He now turned to Gentle and began to fire rapid questions at him. Moran? A morose man, who ascribed his failure to the iniquity of a trust. Quite so. After his first failure he had simply stopped struggling? Just so. He was a baker's assistant? Could be get "Mr. Jackson" a place in the bakery? Mr. Jackson thought that he would like to have a try at the bakery business, Jenny? Hard working, but overwhelmed by her dispiriting environment and the privations of poverty. Just as he thought.

Joe Caffrey? Shiftless? Immoral? Well, well! Joe must become their charge.

In ten minutes John J. knew all he cared to know. As in the organization of his gigantic undertakings, so now here. In this hovel, he had begun by gauging the possibilities of those with whom he would have to deal. He had watched his son and seen the look of interest, growing into admiration, upon his face. Yes, he had made a good beginning.

Haggleton rose and took a final turn of the room:

"When I came here nearly forty years ago," he announced, "this was a clean district. Now it is a dirty one. American cleanliness has been submerged by foreign shiftlessness. Within a week I will have this home of native Americans as neat as a New England farmhouse."

Where was he to sleep? Joe Caffrey would be Philip's guest for a day or two? All right. That nurse had said that the children ought to be in a hospital? Gentle would see to it that they went that very day and got their father's consent? All right.

Gentle went on his mission. Haggleton accompanying him to sell his clothes and buy cheaper ones.

Jenny returned home with her basket of images and welcomed an addition to their resources in the form of a boarder who would be far less trouble than the two children and more profitable. Mr. Jackson, Philip informed her, had seen better days—in fact, until quite recently he had lived in easy circumstances.

Tired as she was, depressed by the knowledge that she had lost Philip, she began to set the hovel to rights.

Margaret Lawrence, entering from the inner room, found her energetically at work making a distinction between the box that contained the coal and the basket that held the potatoes.

Gentle returned, accompanied by the ambulance. The children were bundled off, with much excitement on their part and many farewells, Margaret—final treat exacted from her—riding with them!

Haggleton—now "Mr. Jackson"—returned soon after, having sold his expensive clothes and bought with the proceeds a simple suit, better adapted to the role he was to play.

Jenny shook hands with Mr. Jackson, whom Gentle had "described" and bade him make himself at home. Gentle went.

The new boarder was certainly handy. He took off his coat and offered to help. Without waiting for an acceptance of the offer he began. He was deferential—he had "beautiful manners," Jenny concluded—asking permission even while he set to work. In this way he brought some order into the chaos of the young woman's domestic economy. It was a mere scraping of the surface, but when it had been accomplished Jenny was firmly convinced that it was she who had made the suggestions, Mr. Jackson who had merely carried them out.

"My, but you're handy," said Jenny, glancing around contentedly at the new arrangement of the room and the various small improvements.

"Well, you see, Mrs. Jenny—may I call you that? They all do. I am an old bachelor and used to doing things for myself. You don't mind?"

"Certainly not. I have so much to do I never seem to get a chance to do any one thing thoroughly."

Jenny looked at the alarm clock.

"Father will be home soon for dinner now," she announced, "and Joe, my brother-in-law."

Moran arrived, worn out, in a vile humor. Jenny introduced the new boarder to him.

The baker's assistant looked Mr. Jackson over with listless curiosity, which changed to ill concealed hostility when he saw the neatness of the newcomer's clothes and his well kept hands, the himself had been like that once! Moreover, the man had an insufferable air of distinction. Who and what was he to look like that? Nothing but a failure, endeavoring to find a new foothold in life.

"Sir," does not go down here.'

Moran resolved to establish the proper relations at once.

"I am Moran," he said, "and you are Jackson. 'Mr.' does not go down here."

"All right, Moran. Jackson it is."

Joe arrived, having lost Jenny's $2, but cheerful as ever.

The new boarder interested him, and he began to make his acquaintance, his method being the not unusual one of asking innocently impertinent questions.

Haggleton saw another opportunity, and, as usual, he took it. He talked to Joe, but at Moran.

Yes; Haggleton was looking for a job. No; he had not saved a penny out of his failure.

But Moran snorted.

"Once you are down and out you stay down and out," he snarled.

"Well, I will try, anyhow."

"You won't get the opportunity," persisted Moran.

"I shan't wait for it. I will create it."

"Stuff! Once you are down and out you might as well quit. The capitalists have framed it all up."

Haggleton listened attentively, analyzing the man's arguments as they flowed from his now fluent lips. It was the first time that he heard the voice of social discontent direct. Instead of giving it a hasty moment of attention as it expressed itself in press reports or magazine articles.

What struck him at once about Moran's tirade was that the man placed upon the shoulders of the rich not only the responsibility for all the wrongs of society, but also the duty of righting them without any assistance from him and his class.

Joe became impertinent.

"Stop gassing, Moran," he said tersely. "I always tell him that he's smoking the wrong dope, Mr. Jackson."

"What would you do if you were rich, Mr. Caffrey?" asked Haggleton.

"Oh, say, you just watch me. I'd be at the track every day at 2:45 in the grand stand. Wouldn't I wear the sporty clothes! I would put a thousand on every race, one, two, three, and a thousand straight on every hundred to clog shut."

"You would soon be rid of your money, Mr. Caffrey."

"Not me. Say, do you think that the millionaires haven't got the races fixed, like everything else? They know the owners and the trainers and the jockeys and the starters—oh, say, it's a pipe."

Joe outlined his picture of riches beyond the dreams of avarice:

"Not but that I would not own a million dollar yacht, like John J.," he continued.

Moran sprang up.

"The thief," he shouted, "the robber, the bloodsucker, the murderer! He has made me what I am. He has killed my daughter's husband. He"—

The man choked.

"His daughter's husband, my brother-in-law," explained Joe very calmly, "was killed at a grade crossing by a train on a road in which John J. has a lot of stock."

"Dinner," said Jenny tersely.

The three men rose, drew up their chairs to the table and sat down. Haggleton made a pretense of eating, but barely touched anything. He still devoted himself to Moran. That chance reference to work in the bakery must not be allowed to pass. At last he won from him the admission that a helper in the bakery was sick and that a substitute was needed. A promise to recommend him for the temporary employment was extracted.

And so Haggleton was to be a baker like Moran!

The millionaire turned to Jenny.

"That's fine coffee," he said. "I used to keep house for myself after a fashion, and, do you know, I am just like a woman—I take an interest in prices. What do you pay for this coffee?"

"Eighteen cents," she said, "for a half pound."

"Already ground, I suppose."

"Yes."

"H'm! A pound of good coffee in the bean costs only 28 cents. Ah, yes, we poor people waste a lot of money!"

Moran stared at him.

"Waste money?"

"Yes, sir. I believe there's more extravagance down here than in Fifth avenue. Now, Mrs. Jenny, what do you pay for coal?"

"Fifteen cents a bucketful."

"How much in a bucketful?"

"You can search me."

"Twenty-five pounds," said Joe.

"Twenty-five pounds," calculated Haggleton. "That's eighty bucketfuls to a ton. Eighty times fifteen is $12. You pay twice as much for coal as Haggleton does."

"He buys it by the ton," growled Moran. "Where would we put a ton of coal?"

"And where would we get $6 all at once to pay for it?" asked Joe.

"If Mrs. Jenny will allow me," replied Haggleton, "I'll find a place for the coal one of these days, and we may think up some scheme of buying it by the ton."

Jenny's brain was busily at work after dinner as she turned one statuette after the other, her tousle rapidly passing over their surfaces. She thought of Philip. Would he come that night? No, of course not! He was over there at the boarding house with the woman he loved. Her heart contracted with pain. Oh, if only she had not— Perhaps, if that episode in her life had never been, he might—She sighed with resignation, bent her head low as the tears blurred her vision and went on with her work. Yet hope would not be denied.

Philip did not come.

Gentle arrived at 9 to see how the newcomer was getting along. The two had a long talk on social conditions, temperate, erudite.

Jenny rose at a quarter to 10, worn out, and went to bed. Gentle went soon afterward.

Left alone, Moran and Haggleton did not find a word to say to each other. The millionaire needed fresh air, but the suggestion of an open window was curtly vetoed.

Moran got up and began to undress. He slipped into bed, retaining his trousers.

Haggleton stretched himself luxuriously between the clean, fresh sheets upon the hard mattress. It had been a busy day for him, and he felt tired, but he could not sleep. Too much had happened!

He had found his son!

He had started life anew!

He had accepted the challenge to the greatest battle of his career!

And he must learn to do his loving himself!

CHAPTER VI.

TOILERS AND WRECKS.

ON being awakened by the alarm clock the next morning Haggleton found, to his surprise, that he had slept quite well. The close air of the room had given him a headache, but he shook this off by going down into the street and taking a brisk walk around "three block," inspecting his property closely as he went. He had hardly known that it formed part of his enormous real estate holdings.

On his return he found Jenny ready with the breakfast and Joe and Moran already devouring theirs. It was bread and coffee—nothing more.

After breakfast Moran hurried away to his day of toil in the cellar bakeshop. Joe, after various adroit but vain attempts to borrow a dollar from Jenny or the new boarder, drifted out, and Haggleton, after repeated offers of service to Jenny, resolved that the best thing he could do would be to take a look around and familiarize himself with the condition his property was in. Philip Ames, who was "off" that morning, came in, driven by curiosity, and offered to "pilot "Mr. Jackson" through that unfamiliar part of the town. The offer was accepted with alacrity.

offers you an opportunity to invest your savings so that you will be rich in a few years—stop and carefully consider the proposition. Has he no friends who could furnish money for his enterprise? Why does he seek the small investor? It would be well to consult someone who is in a position to know about the true value of this stock. If there is any doubt on any one point, we advise you to leave your money in the bank where you know it will be safe. Almost any scheme can be made to look plausible on its face, but the small investor often wait years for returns only to learn in the end that the company went into the hands of a receiver.

This bank does a legitimate savings bank business, where the man who desires to save is afforded every advantage for saving and safety for his earnings. The savings bank rate of interest really does amount to something.

COMMON COUNCIL

Council Chambers, May 21, 1910.

The common council for the city of Charlevoix met on the above date, Mayor Hampton presiding.

Aldermen present: Paddock, Swinton, Nordrum; Webster, Rachow and Geiken.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Paddock that the bill as presented by W. E. Parmelee for work done on the swing bridge be approved and an order for the amount due he drawn at the next regular meeting.

Motion prevailed by the following aye and nay vote:

Ayes, Paddock, Swinton, Rachow, Nordrum, Webster and Geiken.

Nays, none.

To the Council:

I desire to submit for your consideration, the plan of having all supplies, of whatever nature, which are required for the city, purchased through one source. I would suggest that one member of such purchasing committee be named from the city council, and one from the board of public works, the city clerk to act as clerk of such committee, and all correspondence to be handled through his office.

By adopting this plan, and buying in quantities sufficient to last longer periods, better prices should be obtained, and by taking all trade discounts the city should be able to buy at less figures than the ordinary dealer, and at the same time, both the council and the board of works would know, through their representative, just what bills were accruing, and what prices were being paid for supplies.

On large orders, tenders should be secured from different dealers, and competition thus encouraged ought to result in a considerable saving to the city.

I would respectfully ask that you adopt this or some better plan as your wisdom may dictate.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Mayor.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Webster, that the recommendation as presented by the mayor be accepted and placed on file. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Webster, that the mayor be named as the member from the council on said purchasing committee. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Rachow and seconded by Ald. Swinton that the estimate of cost of paving, paving district number 8, as presented by the street commissioner be raised to $1150.

Motion prevailed by the following aye and nay vote:

Ayes, Paddock, Swinton, Rachow, Webster, Nordrum and Geiken.

Nays, none.

Moved by Ald. Webster, and seconded by Ald. Paddock, that the committee on public buildings and parks, and the committee on fire and prevention jointly be authorized to construct a new roof on the fire hall. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Geiken and seconded by Ald. Nordrum, that the mayor and clerk be and are hereby authorized to enter into a contract with W. A. Smith, publisher of the Charlevoix Sentinel, to do the city printing for the ensuing year at the same rate the city has paid the past year. Motion prevailed.

Moved by Ald. Paddock and seconde by Ald. Webster, that the following resolution be adopted.

Resolved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix that the grading and paving of Belvedere Avenue from the west line of the property known as the Charlevoix Summer Home Association, west to the east line of Alice street, including the construction of the necessary curbing, gutters, cross-walks, man-holes, sewerage and approaches is a necessary public improvement.

Resolved that the plans, specifications, plat, diagram and estimate of the street commissioner and city surveyor as revised by the common council for the grading and paving of the said Belvedere Avenue with crushed rock, thirty-four feet in width including the necessary curbing, gutters, cross walks, man-holes, sewerage and approaches, be and the same is approved and adopted.

And be it further resolved that the expense of said public improvement shall be defrayed as follows:

That whereas, there are no interior streets and spaces formed by the intersection of streets and alleys and no public grounds, buildings or city property on said portion of Belvedere Avenue to be paved, therefore the said city of Charlevoix shall pay the sum of three hundred fifty dollars ($350.00) being the portion of the estimated cost of said public improvement, to be paid from the general funds of the city of Charlevoix. That the sum of seven hundred dollars ($700.00) being the estimated cost of said public improvement aside from the said sum of three hundred fifty dollars ($350.00) hereby ordered to be paid from the general funds of the city of Charlevoix, shall be paid by special assessment, payable in five equal installments, to be assessed according to the frontage upon the following lands and premises deemed to be benefited by said public improvement, all lots, parts of lots, land and premises abutting and fronting on either side of Belvedere Avenue from the west line of the property known as the Charlevoix Summer Home Association, west to the east line of Alice street, which said lots, parts of lots, lands and premises shall be known as special assessment district number eight.

Public Buildings and Parks

To the Honorable the Mayor and City Council of the City of Charlevoix:

Gentlemen: Your committee having examined the condition of the city park and looked over the ground quite thoroughly beg to offer as a preliminary report the following:

In the opinion of the committee it would seem that very little if any benefit is derived from the city park and it is practically a dead proposition in its present condition.

The committee would recommend that steps be taken at the earliest possible moment to make necessary repairs to the band stand, construct a new stairway, build half a dozen or more suitable benches for use on the top of the bluff, make a roadway through from Clinton street down and around the main center of the park and such other improvements as might be deemed necessary in order to put the property in a fairly good condition

May 21, 1910 O. Nordrum.
W. J. Rachow.
Amos Webster.

Moved by Ald. Paddock and seconded by Ald. Swinton that the report of the committee on public buildings and parks be accepted and placed on file. Motion prevailed.

GOOD EARTH ROADS.

Cheaper Than Other Highways and Easy to Build.

GOOD DRAINAGE A NECESSITY

It Is One of the Principal Points In Making a Good Dirt Roadway—They Are Preferred In Many Sections of the United States.

Long ago I became convinced that if we were to have good roads in our day and generation we must seek some other methods of doing the work and some other material than macadam. For while stone roads have and perhaps always will have an adaptation for certain districts on account of the lack of facilities for good drainage, which is one of the principal points in the construction of earth roads, or where the character of the soil is such that good earth roads cannot be made or for thoroughfares where the travel is great and the valuation high enough to stand the taxation, the expense is far too great to make them practicable for even a small proportion of all the roads.

It must be remembered that no matter how good a stone road is constructed there is a certain amount of wear and tear each day and month and year.

From Good Roads Magazine, New York.
A TYPICAL RURAL EARTH ROAD.

The amount of this wear has been found by experience to be from one-fourth to one-half inch a year.

Others have figured it at only two-thirds of a cubic yard per year.

We also have the experience of city street making. With all of their great valuation to tax cities have found it burdensome to keep up good paved or macadamized streets.

Mind, I am not speaking against macadamized roads. They are, so far as our knowledge of roadmaking now goes, the one thing for thoroughfares or other places where the valuation will afford them without burdensome taxation. And many of such places throughout the United States prefer the well built dirt road. What we want is good roads now, and the question is how to make them with what money is available, and I think it is the wrong policy for a township that has only from $2,000 to $10,000 a year to spend on roads to lay it all out on a mile or two of stone road when by the right methods good earth roads could be kept up over the whole township with the same money or less.

The solution of this, I am convinced, is in learning how to make earth roads. I believe that by proper methods of roadmaking the earth roads, especially in places where the nature of the soil and the facilities for good drainage are favorable, can be made and kept as good as or better on the average than the stone road and at but a fraction of the cost.

The nature of the soil and the facilities for drainage are so varied that it is impossible to lay down any one rule or method of roadmaking. At some places nothing but macadam will do, but there are many, many other places where the earth roads can be made equally good. In fact, in places where the soil is just right—that is, porous enough to let the water through and yet tenacious enough to pack and not become dusty—and the drainage naturally good the earth road is the very best that can be made. And most soils will in a large degree take on the qualities necessary for good roadmaking after good drainage is effected.—J. G. Homsher in Good Roads Advocate.

UNCLE SAM AS ROAD BUILDER

Government Constructing Great Highways In Newly Developed Country.

Experts of many countries are marveling at the great roads which the United States government has constructed and is now constructing on the reclamation projects in the far western states and territories.

More than 600 miles of the most excellent highways that it is possible for man to produce have been completed and are in daily use.

These, of course, do not include the byroads leading to many farms or the many other roads being used for the time being until the macadamized kind can be built.

The dry farmers have had good horses and vehicles since the reclamation work began seven years ago, and these good roads are enabling them to haul their products to the towns and railroad stations and to send their children to school. They regard them as the most important of all aids to progress and prosperity.

Many of these pioneers own automobiles, and it is no unusual sight to see on Saturdays or Sundays a dozen or more motorcars of the latest designs in any of the towns of the older projects. It is interesting to note that Uncle Sam has only fairly begun the building of roads in this newly developed country and that in a very few years the mileage will be reckoned in thousands where it is now counted in hundreds.

KENTUCKY ROCK ASPHALT.

An Ideal Highway Built of It In Detroit, Mich.

A highway of which a Detroit publication speaks in terms of high praise is the road leading to the approach to the Belle Isle bridge. It is surfaced with Kentucky rock asphalt, under specifications, from which the following facts are taken:

The subgrade was excavated and brought to an even surface eight and one-half inches below and parallel with the proposed surface of the roadway and compacted by rolling with a ten ton roller. Upon this crushed limestone two to four inches in size was placed and rolled to three inches in thickness. A second course of similar sized stone filled with limestone screenings and sand was also rolled to three inches, making the foundation courses six inches in thickness.

On this foundation was evenly spread a two and one-half inch course of crushed limestone one and one-half to two and one-half inches in size, which was given one rolling. The asphalt was then spread, being taken to the road on wheelbarrows, dumped and raked to a uniform depth of about three-quarters of an inch in a loose state, this being equivalent to about forty pounds per square yard. This was forced into the voids by two rollings. Then another similar layer of asphalt was applied, rolled twice, left to stand until the next day, then rolled again. The same plan was followed during the two succeeding days, the road being closed to traffic and one rolling each day being given. The road was then opened to traffic.

TAFT FAVORS STATE ROADS.

Chief Executive Thinks the Highway Question Not a National Matter.

National aid for permanent roads, a system of national highways connecting the capital of the various states and of state highways connecting the various county seats, use of federal prisoners for building roads and the establishment of roadmaking on a strictly business basis are some of the suggestions made at the good roads convention.

A letter from President Taft declared against national aid to any great extent. The president says:

"My own view of the good roads question is that it is chiefly a state function and that all the states ought to unite in an effort to promote good roads. I do not think that the farmers are as much interested in the matter as they ought to be.

"Next to education, the system of good roads is the greatest civilizer."

Tip on Road Maintenance.

Foreign countries are years ahead of the United States in road building and road maintenance. They keep men constantly on the roads looking for signs of decay. As soon as a road begins to unravel the spot is repaired. It must be cheaper and better to repair the first indications of deterioration and always have the roads in good shape than to wait until a road is impassable or full of ruts and gullies and then build a new one.

Neighborhood Notes

The last legislature which passed a law exempting soldiers from taxation, who had served in the civil war, evidentally lost sight of the Mexican war, and made no provisions for these soldiers. Some are pointing out the law as being unfair although the omission was unintentional.

A good many seem to think all the veterans of the Mexican war are dead, but an examination of recent letters to the attorney general's office of Mexican war veterans, inquiring about this law would convince them otherwise.

An examination of this law which exempts all civil war veterans and their widows from paying taxes on their homes provided the value does not exceed $1,200, reveals the fact that absolutely no provision was made for the Mexican veterans.

George Frink of Elk Rapids was elected president; J. M. Townsend Muncelona, secretary and John Smallegan of Central Lake, treasurer. Auxiliary organizations to act in conjunction with the county association will be organized in the several villages of the county.

To cut down the expense of hiring offices in private buildings for state officials, an expense which reaches about $3,500 each year, the next legislature may consider the proposition of building an addition to the capitol.

State Dairy and Food Commissioner A. C. Bird owns the Oakland building, in which the offices of the state railroad commission and the offices of the game warden are located. The books of the auditor general show that A. C. Bird is paid $1,800 each year for permitting these two branches of the state government to transact business in his building.

Why go west and pay $500 an acre for fruit farms, when you can secure land in northern Michigan for a mere song, that will in time give you greater returns per acre, than the western land. Dr. Gerow of Cheboygan is an enthusiastic believer in the capabilities of Michigan soil, and owns hundreds of acres of growing orchards in Cheboygan county. Last season he sold the apple crop from a forty acre orchard for $4,000, and the buyer had to do the picking. This represents ten per cent on an investment of $40.00 and looking at it from this viewpoint, his land should be worth $400 an acre. The trees in question were eleven years old.

I became weak and run down and was discouraged. One day a neighbor gave me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills to try and in a short time after commencing their use, I felt better. I procured a further supply and the contents of two boxes relieved me. I am now free from every symptom of kidney complaint."

The above statement was given in August, 1909 and when Mrs. Moore was interviewed on June 20, 1910, she added: "I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as highly today as I did some years ago when they relieved me of kidney trouble. Literary Notes

A Glorious and Safe Fourth

"Dynamite is not essential to patriotism, but neither is total abstinence from fireworks necessary to a sane fourth," says Woman's Home Companion for June. "Washington, for instance, had, in 1801, a municipal fireworks display conducted by experts, lasting two hours, witnessed by forty thousand people, and will have another this year. The money was subscribed by business men, fireworks bought of a firm willing to send men to set them off and the exhibition held in an open space where no damage to life nor building could, nor did result. An automobile parade with prizes, was arranged by a local newspaper, boat clubs held regattas, and a general exodus for a picnic day and a play in the country occurred. For those who had a mind for it, patriotic assemblies were held, the Declaration read and music played its part. And Washington found it worth while, as Toledo has, and Chicago and Cleveland. New York City joins the procession this year. There will be no going back to the old ways. The new way has been tried and found admirable.

"What Washington has done, on a large scale you, in your family and in your neighborhood, can do with equal effect. You may not be able, this first year, to change public sentiment in your community, but you can change it in your own circle. And if you cannot persuade your friends to choose the right course with you, at least you can do this much for them: Show them this page. Make them understand the nature of the danger they face. Above all, tell them that if your words and the words of their trusted physicians have no weight on the question of denying fireworks to little, unskilled, dirty hands, at least they must not neglect the seemingly harmless powder wound. Or if, in spite of your own wisdom, your child suffers through the ignorance of others and is even slightly wounded, do not try the old home remedies that close the wound and shut out the one hope, oxygen. Take him at once to your physician. Give him a fighting chance for his life. Give yourself the chance to escape the unspeakable horror of watching him in the agony of tetanus. Do this much, at least do more, if you can. And you can if you start now."

The Battle

It was now a quarter to 8 as they joined the throng of hurrying toilers. They paused at the Bowery and Canal street and watched the crush of men and women fighting their way up the elevated stairs and packing themselves into the cars. Then they turned to the east and walked against the surging river of humanity.

"You call these the poorest people in New York?" asked Haggleton.

"I suppose so."

"Then—New York makes a pretty good showing. Do you see any rags or misery? Look at these men. They all wear leather shoes, don't they? In Europe the poorest people wear wooden shoes. That's something, isn't it? And they all wear derby hats and starched shirts and neckties and watch chains and overcoats with velvet collars."

"You can't judge by appearances," objected Philip.

"Yes, you can too."

Philip shook his head. "You see only those who have work and are able to work. You don't see those who are left at home. You don't see the sick and the old and the young. You don't see the wrecks."

"No, but I see what makes the wrecks, or some of them," answered Haggleton. "It's extravagance. Most of these men smoke—that's bad—and a lot of them go into saloons, which is worse. And look at the cheap jewelry on the women. Why, they all wear imitation pearls! Look at the banners across the streets with 'balls' and 'concerts' at 25 cents in big letters! I tell you, they waste their money."

"These people must have some pleasures," Philip said.

"Not at first. They must cut out pleasures at first. I did. If they want to escape from these tenements they've got to save."

"So you think they can escape by saving? Do you know that New York has miles and miles of streets like these, with a million human beings herded in foul, dark rooms? Can they all escape by saving?"

Haggleton started to reply, but Philip went on quickly, his voice rising with intenser feeling:

"I'll tell you how one man escaped by saving." He pointed down Orchard street. "He lived in that second house. He was a poor capmaker, and he shot himself because he was out of work and couldn't bear to see his wife and little children suffer. He knew they would get the insurance money, anyway. That's how he saved. And two years ago, over there on Eldridge street"—he pointed again—"I found a family of poor Jews living in a dark corner of the hallway under the stairs. There was no window, no door. It wasn't a room at all—only a narrow slanting space roughly boarded off—and the landlord made them pay $8 a month for it. There the mother had a baby. That's how they saved."

"These tenements are nothing like as bad as they were forty years ago," replied Haggleton. "What do you think they did with the garbage forty years ago? Threw it into the streets for the pigs to eat. Yes, sir! Pigs were the public scavengers. This whole region was so filthy that—well, it was cleaned out by cholera and yellow fever more than once. You knew that, didn't you? And smallpox was the regular thing. Why, the health wardens used to stand on the sidewalk and shout to people upstairs who had ill to put camphor in their clothes and burn some in the stove. That's how they fought disease!"

"Who told you that?" questioned Philip.

"Nobody told me. I saw it. I lived here," answered Haggleton. "And there were slaughter houses everywhere, and fat boilers, and such vile tenements that— They're all gone now—'Bone alley' and 'Kerosene row' and the 'Big Flat' in Mott street and 'Bandits' roost'—but I tell you it was worth a man's life to go past them at night. Now you can go anywhere."

Philip smiled.

"I'll show you a few places where you won't enjoy yourself at night. Still, I admit, we've improved in some things, but we've gone back in others. There may not be as many pigs and murderers about, but there's a lot more consumption and overcrowding. Do you see that little block just ahead? It's only 75 by 200 feet. How many people do you suppose live in it? Guess."

"Seventy-five feet by two hundred," reflected Haggleton, studying the front of the block, with its swarms of children. "Let's see—a thousand?"

"Two thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine—by actual count, and that was five years ago—the population of a good sized town in the space of one of your stables!"

"Good Lord!" exclaimed Haggleton. "How many would that give to a house?"

"From a hundred to a hundred and fifty. We're passing through the most densely populated region in the world, and you own about half of it."

"Not that block?"

"No, but you own enough others. I'll show you some presently."

Haggleton stopped and laid a kindly hand on Philip's shoulder.

"My boy, you think too much about the weak. Think about the strong. Don't you see that this tenement struggle makes men stronger? You know it does. Won't you be the man you are if you'd been coddled in luxury, with everything made easy? I tell you half the big fellows in this country owe their success to being born poor. I tell you, young man, poverty's about the finest school we've got." He paused and then added impressively, "I'm one of the graduates."

Haggleton watched him swing off the ladder and disappear.

"I know," said Philip, "but there are other graduates, and—speaking of wrecks"— He stopped and looked at his watch. "That reminds me I must telephone." He turned into a drug store and called up the Atlantic Wrecking company. "Too bad!" he exclaimed after a brief communication. "There's a grain boat sunk in the East river off Grand street; I've got to see about it."

Haggleton accompanied Philip and got a glimpse of life on the big pontoons and several thrills of pleasure as he noted the young man's quick resourcefulness and a pang of apprehension as he watched him swing off the ladder in his ugly suit and disappear beneath the bubbling river.

As there was a cold rain falling, they spent the waiting hours in the cozy cabin of the Dunderberg, and the crew told stories about perils of the deep.

They had supper with the crew and then started back for New York, taking the ferry to Twenty-third street, where there was something Philip wanted to show Haggleton.

"We'll look in here first," he said and stopped before a large building on First avenue. "This is the Municipal Lodging House. They take in two or three hundred homeless men every night."

"How many homeless men are there in New York?

"Twenty thousand or so."

"Twenty thousand homeless men!" repeated Haggleton. "And what do the others do, those who can't stay here?"

"About 3,000 walk the streets," replied Philip.

"Not on cold nights like this?"

"On cold nights and on hot nights. They huddle in alleyways out of the wind. They crouch over gratings, above engine rooms and get the warm air. They stand in the midnight bread lines and then go back to their holes."

"There are 3,000 like that in New York?"

"Yes."

"And the rest?"

"The rest pay 10 or 15 cents in cheap lodging houses. You'll see."

"What do they pay here?"

"Nothing, but the same man may not come more than three times in a month. If he does he goes to the stone pile. So they're careful. Come in."

The office attendants nodded pleasantly to Philip.

Downstairs they saw these men stripped of their clothes (some of them peeled off two or three sets of garments—their whole wardrobe) and scrubbed under a hot shower bath. One man's legs were blotched with sores (from low vitality, the doctor said), and one had a deeply ulcerated heel from walking on his uppers.

Philip now led the way into another lodging house, in the opposite block. "This place accommodates about 400, and the men pay from 15 to 25 cents a night. There's no compulsory bath, and as for cleanliness—look!"

Philip pointed out that each cot had a small, dirty locker for the men's clothes, where abundant cracks encouraged the free circulation of vermin.

"They get no nightgowns," continued Philip, "and the sheets are changed only once or twice a week. Many of the men have loathsome diseases, many have consumption, and there's no doubt consumption and other diseases can be transmitted from man to man by the contamination of sheets."

"How many of these lodging houses are there?"

"About 140, and you've seen the best. The others are so filthy that—well, I asked an attendant once how often they washed the towels, and he said, with a grin: 'Wash 'em? We never wash 'em. We use 'em until they break.'"

They went to Grand street and visited more of these sinister asylums on the Bowery where banks are offered to human wrecks at 20 or 15 or 10 cents a night or less. In one hideous resort on Mulberry street, where the charge was 7 cents, they found men ranged along in hammocks, with neither sheets nor covers, and dozens sleeping on the bare floor.

"Pretty bad," muttered Haggleton. "But what's your idea in showing me all this?"

"It's a problem for you to solve. We have ideas, but you'll have better ones before you get through."

"Why do you say that?" asked Haggleton.

"Because you have a great brain. You know how to organize. Well, organize these wasted lives, find some place for them. It's up to you."

Haggleton shook his head.

"I'm not responsible for these lodging houses."

"You are responsible," flashed Philip, "because it's men like you who own them; it's men like you who take the dimes and pennies of these poor devils—talk about tainted money—a million dollars in lodging house money paid every year in New York city by your fellow graduates in poverty."

"No, no," objected Haggleton. "It's not poverty that brought them where they are; it's drink and laziness."

Philip paused, and his eyes met the old man's in steady defiance. Then he said slowly: "No; you are wrong. These men are products of conditions. It's years of bad air in your tenements and of underfeeding at your wages that make them crave drink. It's a childhood wasted in brutalizing labor that has weakened their bodies and dulled their minds. There are 20,000 of them in New York. Mr. Haggleton, who are bums, wrecks, lodging house loafers, but don't forget that they are victims of a cruel order which for the vast majority gives poverty as the only reward of toil."

"Nonsense!" said Haggleton.

READY MEDICINE CASE.

How to Make One at Home Out of Linen or Canvas.

For the friend who cannot travel without her pet remedies a homemade medicine case would make an acceptable gift. It is easily made to hold one's special bottles and has the advantage of adding little weight to the satchel or suit case.

Cut an oblong piece of heavy cardboard and stitch it between two pieces of heavy tan colored or dark red linen or canvas. The covering is cut longer than the cardboard on the ends to allow for seams and stitching. The sides of the linen are enough longer than the board on both sides to permit it to be folded over in envelope fashion when the case is closed.

When the cardboard is in place the cover is stitched close to its edge all around. These edges may have four or five rows of stitching or can be bound with white linen braid or a braid of a contrasting color. The same braid is sewed to each end of the case to strap the flaps into place when folded over.

The inside of the case is finished with two bands of the material, one above the other, and divided into pockets to hold the various bottles of medicine. The compartments are divided by machine stitching or close brier stitching. They should be deep enough to hold a bottle up to its shoulder.

Two oblong envelopes and a long, narrow one of the linen are added to hold absorbent cotton, gauze bandages, court plaster and a few simple utensils, such as a medicine dropper, hypodermic syringe case and a clinical thermometer. Between the case two linen straps are arranged to hold a pair of scissors.

On the outer flap of the case should be embroidered initials or monogram in tones to match the braid. Several thicknesses of cotton batting should be cut to just fit inside the case over the bottle. They can be buttonholed loosely in colored cotton to hold together. This coverlug or one of eiderdown is slipped over the bottles when traveling to keep them from spilling.

While it is not necessary to fill this case, it is as well to put in bottles at least. Buy them first, so the compartments can be made to fit. Those without patent stoppers are best.

A Dismal World.

"Why are you sad, my dear? You ought to be supremely happy. Here, I've just inherited a fortune, and everything looks rosy. I can't understand why at such a time as this you should look so dismal. What is it? Have you heard bad news from home?"

"No, no; it isn't that. I'll try to throw it off. I suppose I'm foolish not to be thoroughly happy. Let us not mention the matter again."

"But I insist on knowing what it is that so depresses you. If it's anything that I can help I shall"—

"Well, if you must know, I've just heard that the Smithdelphs next door are going to move away, so she'll not be here to feel jealous of me when we begin to put on style after you get your money."—Chicago Record-Herald.

His Rent Flag.

On Jan. 18 every year, the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, the Duke of Wellington is bound to present to the sovereign a small flag, which is the annual rent in "petit sargenty" by which the estate of Strathfieldsaye is held of the crown. The flag must be a miniature tricolor or eagle of the Napoleonic army, fringed with gold, with a gilded eagle on the head of the staff and the number of the year embroidered at the top corner of the flag near the eagle.

An Old Idea.

"What was that?"

"The block system."—Baltimore American.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic this week has one of the best singing, dancing and sketch teams that has ever been seen in the theater. Fox & Lawrence have been doing Dutch for Monday and Tuesday. Scotch Comedy for Wednesday and Thursday with the Scotch Sword Dance by Miss Lawrence, she being very clever, as the little lady is from Scotland. On Friday and Saturday they give the sketch, "Ireland isn't Ireland any More," Irish dances and Irish Songs. It must be said of Miss Lawrence that she is the cleverest clog dancer of any lady seen in Charlevoix. The Majestic now changes both films each day and starting next Saturday will run a Saturday matinee at 3.00 p. m., when the regular night show will be given. Prof. Roy Pitzen, a piano player of note, has accepted a position with the Majestic and will be on hand by today. Walthe Campbell, in speaking of Mr. Pitzen, said "He has worked for me at my 'Alum' theater of Cadillac for the past two years and will say he is the best vandeville player I ever had. Mr Pitzen is also a classical player as well, playing anything at sight, and last but not least it's worth ten cents to hear him laugh for he has Frank Lantphear beat a mile."

The versatility of the stage folk who play in stock has passed into a proverb. A stock actor has to have all sorts of accomplishments and he must be ready to turn his hand to everything. He must sing and dance and box and fence and have a smattering of French and German as well as a mastery of the Irish brogue, Scotch burr, French and Italian dialect, so in picking out a stock company of even balance a manager and director has his hands full, but W. G. Campbell who is to present "Our" stock company for the summer, has engaged a young and dainty leading woman to support Edward Russell this summer in the person of Miss Grace Lovell Bryan, niece of William J. Bryan, and who is said to possess all the talents to make a successful stock leading lady. Miss Bryan is now playing in Minneapolis, but not many days will elapse before local audiences will have the pleasure of having her in our midst and as she is a delightful lady off the stage as well as on, it is safe to say she will make a splendid impression.

NORTH MICHIGAN FIELD MEET

To Be Held in Charlevoix Next Saturday, June 4

SEVERAL HUNDREO WILL ATTEND

Hard Fought Contests Will be Waged in all Events

But Charlevoix is Determined to Win the Championsbip of Northern Michigan—Two Ball Games Will be Played.

A great deal of interest is developed in the Northern Michigan field meet to be held at Charlevoix Saturday June 4. At first the local high school planned having a meet to include only the schools of Charlevoix and Emmet counties as a preliminary to the Northern Michigan meet to be held at Traverse City, but instead of being a preliminary to the Traverse meet it is to include it and the championship of the north will be decided at Charlevoix instead of Traverse City.

On June fourth Charlevoix will take on the appearance of a Fourth of July celebration. Excursions will come from Traverse City, Petoskey, East Jordan, Boyne City and Harbor Springs, bringing with them a hilarious crowd of rooters, and a delegation of high school athletes to the number of one hundred or more to participate in the fifteen athletic contests and two base ball games.

Traverse City has entered fifteen men in the track meet and in addition will bring their base ball team to cross bats with the local high school team. With the two teams will come several hundred rooters. Traverse City boys having chartered a boat for the occasion. The rivalry between Traverse and Charlevoix is especially keen as last year's Charlevoix track team won the championship of the schools above Traverse City, while Traverse woo the championship of the schools below Traverse. The two schools did not meet last year as the championship contests were held too late in the year for any farther conteats. This year Traverse wishes to demonstrate to the people of the north that they are far superior to Charlevoix in track athletics. Charlevoix has lost all but four of last year's point winners while Traverse have lost but one. Also Traverse have had the benefit of experience and training which results from the participation in previous meets, they having sent a team to the big M. A. C. meet.

Boyne City also will be well represented, a big crowd coming over with their base ball and track teams. This is the first year Boyne City have taken an interest in track athletics and as they were especially anxious to have the meet held in Charlevoix in order that they might send a team, they will bear watching.

Petoskey is as strong as ever. They have been sending out bear stories about poor material, poor conditions, etc., but from past experience, the locals have learned to expect a tough proposition from them. Petoskey also brings their base ball team for a game with Boyne City during the meet.

Harbor Springs will send a delegation, the second of their experience in track athletics.

East Jordan track will be represented with a small but strong team and will be heard from. Moody from Pellston will not go home without a ribbon or two and we expect Kalkaska to win several points.

Two beautiful pennants are on exhibition at Levinson's store this week. The school that wins the championship pennant will have to make a record.

Much interest centers in the ball game between Traverse and Charlevoix as the local boys have won from them and unless they can turn the tables they will have some difficulty in claiming the championship in base ball.

Traverse won in their district last year and Charlevoix in this. Don't miss the game this year.

There is not a man in Charlevoix who cannot remember the broad jumping, high jumping and weight throwing of younger days, as well as many races in which he has participated. Neither is there any man or woman who does not enjoy the sight of well trained athletes in wholesome competition.

A list of the events follwa:

100 yard dash; 220 yard dash; 440 yard dash; 880 yard run; 1 mile run; 2 mile run; 220 yard low hurdle; 120 yard high hurdle; 12 yard shot put; 12 yard hammer throw; Running high jump; running broad jump; pole vault; Discus throw; ½ mile relay race.

OBJECT OF ASSOCIATION

Will be to Secure Recognition of Northern Michigan Apples.

Last week we mentioned the organization of the Straits of Mackinac Apple Belt association. Briefly the plans of the organization are: To make a distinctive market for apples grown in the district comprised by the counties of Cheboygan, Emmet, Antrim and Charlevoix by proper grading and advertising of the apples grown in this region and making the trademark of the association, a guarantee of perfect fruit, thereby securing the prices which the quality of Straits of Mackinac fruit is worthy of in the markets of the world and which the experience of the growers in the west has demonstrated can be secured by proper organization along these lines.

Grain Harvest in Western Michigan.

MICHIGAN IS THE BEST STATE

Continuation of Struthers Letter From Last Week

BUT THEY ARE ALL BOOSTERS THERE

Annual Rose Festival at Portland Grand Show

Every County and State Contributes Their Share of Roses and the Time is Spent in Fun and Merriment.

After their exhibit at Chicago they returned and sent men into every county to canvass for a booster fund and they raised a large fund to scatter a printed description of every county in the state giving a statement showing the advantages each county has to offer prospective home-seekers, in glowing colors but they did not say anything about the disadvantages. In this way land is boomed to five times what it is worth. The soil and water is good in western Oregon, and if you are web-footed you can get around in winter if your feathers will shed water.

Michigan has nothing to lose in a comparison with any state west of the Rocky mountains for anyone looking for a place to make a home, but the lumber jacks might do a little better here as long as the timber lasts. And the way they are wasteing it it will soon be gone. There are many mills here that cut rail road ties only and they square a log in four cuts and send the slabs out to the the slab pile to be burned. At least one quarter of the timber is wasted, of course the large mills cut mostly lumber. They are more careful and try to utilize everything that can be used but the small mills are timber butchers.

We are having light frosts now. There has been no killing frost since the first of March but that is something unusual, and is proved by the precaution taken by the fruit growers. They bought thousands of petrolum smudges to protect the orchards in case of frost. They claim it will do it. The idea is to cover the orchard with smoke, if threatened with frost.

Portland is getting ready for their annual rose festival. It is going to be a great blow out, they have raised $100,000, $20,000 is to be expended on one parade. Every vehicle of every description is to be decorated with roses. Just where the roses are coming from I do not know. Roses are in bloom now and there is a lot of them in the city. They got rose bushes sent to them from about every country in Europe and Japan and China have sent their share also every state in the union. Big prizes are to be given for the best decorated rig in the parade. Even baby cabs have a class. Custom compels every man on the street to wear a rose, and if he does not he does not know what will happen to him, for people, especially women, can take liberties that would not be allowed or thought of any other time. Last June a bevy of six girls stood on a street corner waiting for somebody to come along not wearing a rose, pretty soon a verdant came along and, alas, he had no rose. The girls waited until their victim came up then they caught him, kissed him, hugged him until he broke away and ran for all he was worth. Two smarties were coming in the same direction, they saw the other fellow getting kissed and hugged. They thought that was too good to be missed. They had roses but threw them away and when they got even with the girls they slowed up to give them a good chance, each girl gave them a pail of dirty water over their heads. Smarties did not wait for the next thing on the program and I do not know what that would have been. This festival is to be held June sixth to eleventh both days included. It is worth seeing but there will be such a crowd that it will be uphill work to get within seeing distance. I am going home before long but first I want to see more of this country. It rained so much last winter that I could not get around very much. I will close now.

TOWNSEND HIS CHOICE

Hon. George B. Horton Comes Out Strong for Jackson Man

Times Demand Active, Constructive and Assertive Statesmanship.

The Hon. George B. Horton of Fruit Ridge, former Master of the State Grange, in a letter to Paul H. King, Secretary of the Townsend Campaign committee, announces himself as unqualified in favor of Congressman Townsend's candidacy for the senate. It seems that at the banquet of the Adrian McKinley club last winter, Mr. Horton expressed his approval of Senator Burrows' attitude on the Postal Savings Bank bill. This expression, friends of Mr. Burrows, have been trying to convert into an endorsement of the senator's candidacy for re election. Mr. Horton's attitude is of considerable significance and his letter leaves no room for doubt as to his position. The letter is as follows:

Fruit Ridge, Michigan,
May 20, 1910.

Mr. Paul H. King,
Lansing, Mich.

My Dear Sir:—

Special reference having been made as commendatory to the Burrows' campaign of a few words of commendation which I expressed to the senior senator at the Adrian McKinley club banquet because of his favorable speech-mention of the Postal Savings Bank proposition, it is now but just to Mr. Townsend (whose candidacy for the United States senate I most sincerely hope will be successful) to say that what passed at Adrian by way of commending Senator Burrows had no significant bearing on senatorial preferences for the future. Mr. Burrows has served long and faithfully and his record both as congressman and senator has been clean of damaging incidents and his services have been of great value to district, state and the nation. While the state should think none the less of Senator Burrows, the present time and conditions demand a new and younger man to fill the place Mr. Burrows has honored so long. The self-content and conservatism which naturally come of a long and continued public service is not compatible with the earnest demand of the state in these strenuous times when our state and Uncle Sam have questions to contend with which require active, constructive and assertive statesmanship. I believe that Charles E. Townsend is especially equipped to meet the requirements demanded by the people of Michigan of the man who occupies the position of United States senator.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) GEORGE B. HORTON.

The band received $30.00 which is less than half of the proceeds.

Literary Notes

Help Save the Babies.

"This summer, when the thermometer goes up to eighty, ninety and one hundred degrees, the death rate among babies in your town will go up with the mercury, unless you women and mothers do something to prevent it," says Robert W. Bruere in Woman's Home Companion for June. "When the hot weather comes you will find, if you have eyes to see, as a good physician once put it, the babies will die off like flies."

"You belong to a Ladies' Committee in your church? Consult your pastor and see if you cannot get a room in the church or Sunday school in which to hold a mother's class at least once a week from the first of June to the middle of September. If the church does not seem the fitting place, use a room in the public school. Why should our splendid school buildings be idle all summer when there mothers to teach and babies' lives to be saved? Any room more than ten by ten feet with lots of air and sunshine will do."

"Then get your city health officer or your good family physician to meet the mothers regularly at least once a week. If you can afford it, employ a trained nurse to help organize the class and to follow the mothers into their homes with her practical knowledge and deserved authority. But if this is out of the question, volunteer your own services."

"Then invite the mothers in your town to come to your class. If at first they are shy, visit them in their homes and explain what you have to offer. And if they are still unwilling to come, give them home instruction, teach them how to ventilate the room where the baby sleeps, teach them under the guidance of your physician how to dress the baby appropriately, urge them to feed their infants naturally and never to wean them while the weather is very hot."

"And if they have bottle babies, stimulate their interest in the purity of the milk, lead them in an investigation of the farms whence the milk comes and teach them—always under the guidance of your physician or in co-operation with their physician—how to modify the milk for the babies' use."

ADVICE ON TAR MACADAM ROADS

Suggestions For Constructing Highways of This Material.

MUCH DEPENDS ON LOCALITY.

Highway Engineer Should Be Consulted and Given the Data Bearing on the Problem — Topography of Country and Traffic Should Be Studied.

As many industrious members of various rural communities are anxious to receive information as to what kind of tar macadam roads to build, an expert authority on road construction and maintenance gives the following valuable advice:

"The proper determination of what kind of tar macadam road to build in a given locality could only be made by a competent highway engineer in possession of all the data bearing on the problem and preferably by an examination on the ground.

Leaving for the moment the matter of cost out of the question, the selection of a suitable method of construction and of materials best adapted thereto depends upon so many factors that no choice is possible without thorough study of the surrounding conditions. This would include a knowledge of the location of the road, its grades, the topography of the country through which it runs, the climatic conditions and especially of the traffic to which it is subjected.

A construction that would give satisfactory results in one section of the country might be entirely unsuited to another section, and in the same manner materials used successfully in a warm climate might fail in one where extreme cold prevailed during a part of the year.

When, as is almost always the case, low cost is the controlling consideration, still other factors are introduced into the problem, and still more data are required for its proper solution. The question then becomes one not of building the best possible road, but of building the best possible road that can be built for the money available. While it is not a simple matter to answer the first question, yet it is comparatively simple as contrasted with the second, and it is just here that the services of a specialist are indispensable.

IDEAL STRETCH OF MACADAM.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

It is seldom that the available funds are sufficient to pay for the best possible road, and it is necessary to sacrifice in the construction to keep within the limits of the available funds. Such weighing of cost and quality and the final decision as to what is the best and most economical procedure require not only careful thought, but also a thorough familiarity with the whole subject of road building and maintenance.

There are many road hinders composed principally of tar, besides the several tars themselves. Most are employed in road building. Their use has been attended by both success and failure, neither being necessarily an index of the value of the material, for the selection with due regard to conditions to be met and the manipulation in the actual work affects results fully as much as any inherent qualities of the materials.

As in most work of a similar nature, the best results are to be expected when a material and method of construction are chosen which have given satisfaction in a case similar to the particular one under discussion; hence in the last analysis the most reliable information is to be gained from service tests of roads subjected to the same outside influences as that which is to be built.

Remove the Mud Tax Burden.

No plan for spring work is complete which does not include dragging the roads. If this is attended to at the proper time it insures good roads for the season and removes the larger share of that awful burden, the mud tax. In this matter the towns and cities are equally interested with the farmers, and their co-operation is not generally hard to secure if the matter is handled rightly. Road dragging is one of those things that must be secured through co-operation if wide spread benefits are to be enjoyed.

Prosperity Follows Good Roads.

You show me any community in this or any other state where there are good roads, said a speaker at a good roads convention, and I will show you a community where there are no paint famished buildings or tottering fences, a community where there is the air of prosperity, thrift and progression.

CATAMARAN MOTORBOAT.

A Marine Curiosity That Develops Considerable Speed.

This curious catamaran motorboat, the property of a water enthusiast in Janesville, Wis., attains a speed of eighteen miles an hour, although equipped with a light engine of but six horsepower. Its length is thirty feet, the beams three and a half feet, and it consists of twin hulls or tubes eleven and one-eighth inches in diameter. The tubes are made of galvanized iron, and upon them rests a platform fourteen feet long. This platform, provided with a railing and canvas sides, contains the engine and steering wheel and furnishes a riding place for one or more persons.

The boat is so light on the water that it takes its highest speed just about as quickly as the motor is opened up and by the adjustment of ingenious balancing weights runs on a level keel, the stern not even settling when running at highest speed. The rudder, as is shown in the illustration, is arranged on a crosspiece near the bow, this proving necessary because it retarded the speed when located at the stern.

On the shaft near the motor is an air pump, the purpose of which is to keep a pressure of air in the hulls at all times. Pressure gauges for each tube are arranged on each side of the pump.—Gas Power.

The Hookworm Disease.

The American hookworm is said, on high medical authority, to be widely prevalent in the south. It enters the human system to some extent through the mouth, but for the most part through the skin. It lodges in the intestines, where it feeds on the mucous membrane, forming a poison which, while rarely fatal, renders the victim anaemic and thus retards development. Hookworm patients are susceptible to other serious diseases, as the disease saps the vitality. The worms breed and lay eggs, which pass out into the soil, where they hatch to become a serious danger of infection to other persons. Better sanitary methods prevent the hatching of the eggs.

CHAPTER VII.

MORE WRECKS.

THE next morning Moran grudgingly announced that he would probably be able to get Jackson a temporary job in the bakeshop. The helper was still sick.

Gentle soon arrived, accompanied by the young diver. Both were intensely interested in the millionaire's venture. This morning Gentle was off duty, while Philip had another diving job to attend to. Philip went away, first arranging with Haggleton to meet him at Chatham square at a quarter past 12.

Nor was the morning wasted. Gentle put up shelves; Haggleton sorted out rubbish. Gentle quietly noticed that Joe was actually busy under the driving influence of the millionaire. Jenny helped with suggestions and little touches. The flat was beginning to take on a homelike air.

At 12 o'clock Haggleton left the flat to keep his appointment. He was in excellent spirits.

"Ah," exclaimed Philip as they met, "so you came! You're game, all right. Well, let's eat—in here. Keep your hat on."

They entered a Bowery restaurant near Chatham square, a battered place seen through two dusty windows. At long tables were silent, shifty eyed men who seemed to sit as far apart as possible. And they all kept their hats on and their coat collars turned up, while hard faced waiters moved among them bawling out orders.

"Not bad, that pile," declared Haggleton as they came out. "Now I'm ready for anything you can show me, the worst you can show me."

Philip's face was set. This man wanted to see poverty and misery. Very well.

"I know an old lady on Roosevelt street," he said, "who is dying of consumption. We'll go there first."

On the way he spoke briefly of the case. The old lady had no one in the world to care for her but a little granddaughter eight years old. The child went to school, so the sick woman was absolutely alone for hours every day. And she was so feeble she could scarcely lift herself from the bed.

Philip turned into a dark hallway with greasy green walls; they climbed four flights of stairs to a tiny room at the back. The floor was bare of covering, and the only furniture was a cot bed, two chairs and a little stove. There was one window, and the walls were painted red.

The dying woman lay propped against a pillow, and her thin face brightened as she saw Philip. No, she wasn't lonely, and, anyway, Ella mustn't miss her school. Oh, yes, they were comfortable enough. Ella didn't mind sleeping on a blanket—over there in the corner. The rent? Why, $4 a month. It was a nice room, only she wished the sun could shine in. She loved the sun. There were a few weeks in June when the sun did shine in, but June was a long way off. She closed her eyes wearily and lay still.

"Well?" asked Philip.

"There's nothing to say," replied Haggleton. "She's going to die. We're all going to die."

"But that child—only eight years old?"

"It's life," said Haggleton.

The next case was farther down the street—an Irish longshoreman about thirty-five, who also was nearing his end—consumption and cancer of the gut had come home for his last days. He wanted to be near the wife and the kid—a little fellow of five, playing about, barefoot, on the cold floor.

The sick man lay in a foul back room where there was no window. He knew that he was dying, but he was happy to be home again near the wife and the kid. He was in no pain.

Haggleton beckoned the woman into the front room and questioned her. It was exposure to bad weather that had caused his sickness, not drinking. Did she work herself? Yes; she did cleaning.

As they came away Haggleton discussed this case. What could you expect? There must have been some taint in him. A sound man doesn't get cancer and consumption. He didn't, Philip didn't. This Irishman was evidently unsound.

"Haven't you any pity for an unsound man?" protested Philip.

"What's the use of pity? An unsound man is unsound. He's sure to perish; better he should. The way to improve the race is to prune away the weak and unworthy. That's what poverty does."

"And the weak ought to perish—you really mean that?"

"Certainly, whether they're weak in body or mind."

"My God!" exclaimed Philip. "That's the most brutal talk I ever heard!"

"Brutal, yes, but—think it over. I say the weak and the unworthy ought to perish. It's true when you grow fruits, when you breed animals, isn't it? Then why isn't it true if you want to build up a race of men?"

"Because"—Philip hesitated—"because the greatest authority in the world is against you."

"What authority is that?"

"The authority that says, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

"H'm!" grunted Haggleton and fell into silence.

They had come to a block of better looking tenements and made their way to a four room flat with signs of relative prosperity if not of cleanliness. This was the home of a strong Italian woman who supported her family by taking in washing. The mother explained that her husband had temporarily abandoned her, so she had taken two lady boarders.

The two lady boarders presently appeared, one showing a hand luridly bandaged and the other a very queer face. It was the girl with the bandaged hand who had stirred Philip's interest. She was a "dipper" at the gold dust factory in which Jenny Moran worked and had contracted tuberculosis of the joints. This had shown itself in her hand, which had swollen to double its size and had just been operated upon at the hospital. She unwrapped the cloth and exposed a sickly, whitish mass with deep red cuts where the knife had gone. The hand looked dead and useless.

Philip whispered to Haggleton that the doctor had told him the disease would probably spread through the girl's body and ultimately kill her. It was clearly a life put in jeopardy by a dangerous trade.

But Haggleton's curiosity was not yet satisfied. He wanted to know what was the matter with the other lady boarder's face. And after some questioning he discovered that she was the victim of a beauty doctor. In spite of her poverty, she had somehow raised $80 and given it to this wretch—sixty for removing a deep frown line in her forehead and thirty for filling in a wrinkle. And the result was that the paraffin injected into the forehead had run together in a lump, so that she seemed to have a perpetual angry boil between her eyes, while the paraffin for the wrinkle had spread under her cheek, making it now red, now purple, according to the weather. She had become a living barometer.

"The greatest authority in the world is against you."

"Now, then," triumphed Haggleton on the floor below, "was I right in saying that the poor are extravagant? Ninety dollars for a beauty doctor when she had no shoes!"

"She was foolish," admitted Philip, "but there are worse things than that."

He turned into a forbidding street that stretched like a sinister canyon between two rows of evil looking tenements.

"Do you know who owns this block?" asked Philip.

"Why—er—yes, of course; I own it."

"And it's one of the possessions you needn't be proud of. Every room and corner is poisoned with consumption germs. They call it 'lung block.'"

"'Lung block,'" mused Haggleton. "Well, that's only a name."

Philip entered the first tenement at hand and stopped at two narrow doors that stood side by side halfway down the hall. He opened these doors and looked in. Then he went up another flight and opened two corresponding doors.

"What are you doing?"

"Wait," replied Philip, and he continued his search in the next tenement.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "I thought so." They were standing in the half lighted hallway of a third floor.

"Look there!" He pointed to the boards under one of the two doors.

"They are wet," said Haggleton. Then he looked closer. "No; it's not water. It—it's red!"

"Open the door," said Philip.

Haggleton obeyed and in spite of himself started back at the stench. "Horrible!" he cried. "What is it?"

"One of the signs," answered Philip, "a thing you can see almost any day in this block."

"But—but where does it come from?"

Philip answered sternly: "From the men and women and children who pay you rent for tainted homes. Sometimes it's sprinkled all along the halls. They have no marble bathrooms, sir, these tenants of yours, when they have hemorrhages!"

CHAPTER VIII.

AFTER THE BALL.

A FEW nights later Philip kept his promise to Jenny Moran and accompanied her to one of the numerous balls that form so important a factor of the social life of the lower east side of New York in winter.

As they entered the hall about 200 couples were doing a slow twostep with set and serious faces, most of the girls chewing gum in time to the measure and many of the young men holding lighted cigars or cigarettes between two fingers, while the other two clasped the lady's hand.

One look at Philip's face showed Jenny that he did not care much for this, and as she cared very little about it herself (what she wanted was to get him alone) she suggested that they go up into the gallery and look on, and, if Philip felt like ordering two glasses of beer, why, that would be very nice. Philip ordered the beer, and they took seats in the gallery.

Presently the music struck up an inviting waltz with a languorous, intensified beat, and Jenny leaned forward with a half sad, half longing expression which, she knew very well, heightened her beauty, especially in profile. Then suddenly she turned to him with a warm, appealing look. "I suppose I must give it all up, mustn't I, Phil?"

She was like a disappointed child, and he felt sorry for her. "You mean dancing? Why, no! There's no harm in dancing."

They danced the next waltz, and as Philip held the lithe young creature and felt her graceful, supple movements he realized vaguely that she was not created for factory toil and a dull tenement life. And Jenny, gliding to the delicious measure, forgot all but one thing—that she was here in Philip's arms.

On their way home Philip tried to have a serious talk with her, but it was not so easy to say just the right thing.

They did not talk much after that, but Philip thought for a long time about this evening, with its apparently trivial happenings, and somehow they filled him with a vague uneasiness.

In the morning he awoke pale and unrefreshed, and when he joined the Moran household after breakfast Haggleton observed that he looked tired.

"It's nothing," said Philip; "I'm not accustomed to balls."

Haggleton went out with Philip. He, too, had slept badly. He had been awakened when Jenny came in, and for more than an hour he had thought about this boy, his son. He did not like the idea of his going out with Jenny Moran.

The old man began by talking about Margaret.

"She looks to me like a fine girl," he approved, "but if I know anything about women she's got a bit of spirit in her, and—you'd better cut out anybody else."

"You mean Jenny," said Philip, who started to explain the situation as well as he could without revealing Jenny's previous life, but Haggleton interrupted him: "I know about that. I have lived sixty years with my eyes wide open. It's not so hard to guess as you think, young man."

"Then you must approve of my doing what I can to help her?"

"Does it help her much to dance with her?" replied Haggleton dryly.

"If other people had felt their responsibility toward her as I do, she wouldn't be where she is today."

"What do you mean by that?" asked Haggleton.

"You control the New York Midland, don't you?"

"Why, I—I suppose so," answered Haggleton, surprised at this sudden turn.

"Well, the New York Midland killed her husband at one of its grade crossings. The law commands you to put gates at these crossings, but you laugh at the law, and every year you kill hundreds of innocent citizens as you killed her husband. Then you refused to pay her a cent of damages, and as she was a poor woman she couldn't press the suit. So she was left without a dollar in the world, and she had a little baby, and—well, the end of it was she went to the bad."

"I didn't know that," said Haggleton.

"There's a good deal you rich men don't know and don't want to know. I tell you, Jenny Moran would be a good woman today if she'd had a fair chance. And, if you think I'm going to turn my back on her as your criminal railroad did, then you're very much mistaken."

One morning, a day or two after the millionaire's second tour with Philip among his tenements, a boy arrived from the bakery to tell Moran that he was to take charge of the night shift and must report that evening at 6. Moran sent him back with word that he could bring the assistant he had already spoken about if he were needed, and the answer came shortly afterward by the same carrier that he must not fail to do so. The helper had "completely given out." It was typhoid beyond a doubt.

Having warned Haggleton to take a good rest in the afternoon, the baker disappeared, as usual. The millionaire, with the beginning of his new career before him and anticipating busy days to come, decided to pay another visit of inspection to his tenements, but this time alone. Philip was known and welcomed wherever he went, but the owner of all this shameful property earning blood money had the strange experience of having doors slammed in his face and of being ordered out of his own houses by his own janitors, who looked upon him with darkest suspicion. Yet wherever he went he could not help seeing that conditions, bad as they were in themselves, were aggravated at least 50 per cent by the shiftlessness, the neglect, of his tenants. Haggleton was beginning to formulate his own plans of tenement reform. He would keep them to himself until the proper moment came to lay them before his son. At least they would be practical.

By 1 he was back home and at Jenny's suggestion lay down to get some sleep. By 5 Moran came in and, after another tirade against capital, bade him prepare to accompany him.

CHARLEVOIX WON SATURDAY

Two More Games Remain to be Played this Season.

Saturday, May 28, the Charlevoix high school base ball team kept up their good work by defeating Petoskey high school at Petoskey. While the game might be called a loose game, the local boys had the best of the game all the time, Joe Powers, the local pitcher, striking out fifteen men. The errors were distributed, eight for Petoskey and six for Charlevoix, and Charlevoix earned eleven hits to Petoskey's ten.

Charlevoix has now succeeded in defeating all the teams with which she has played excepting Boyne City. With the teams that have beaten them the locals have turned the tables with a larger score and they will do the same with Boyne City June 11th.

Two more games remain to be played, one with Traverse City next Saturday during the field meet and one with Boyne City June 11. By winning these two games the local boys will have an excellent claim on the championship of northern Michigan again. The team has already defeated Traverse City and their hopes are high for the championship.

Prof. R. H. Pitzen, Pianist, Can Play Them all at Will.

Professor R. H. Pitzen, pianist at the Majestic theater has accomplished the most remarkable feat of mastering and committing to memory the large number of 428 different musical compositions, any one of which he can play at a moment's notice. The time taken to commit the 428 pieces has been over two years and he is continually adding new ones. It is not at all improbable that the professor is striving for a record in this respect and that he has any one in Charlevoix beaten, hands down, with the number of pieces he now boasts of, is beyond question. Prof. Pitzen will not state about the record business. He merely states that his feat is but an example of what the mind is capable of doing when one's energies and will power are exerted in that direction.

Her Sweetheart—The dearest little woman in all the world.

Mother—If she would only regard my wishes more.

Father—She's cost enough to bring up, still—

Brother—She'd be all right if she'd take a little advice from me.

Optimist—Thank heaven for putting such a glorious creature on earth!

Old Friend—She's a fine girl, but she is changeable.

Disappointed Lover—She talks too much.

Rival—Her figure's all right, thanks to her dressmaker.

Cynic—Pooh! She's like all the rest.

Maid—I know why she appears so beautiful.

Wonders In the Equine Foot.

The foot of a horse is one of the most ingenious and unexampled pieces of mechanism in the whole range of animal structure. The outside hoof is made up of a series of thin vertical laminae of horn, about 500 in number. Into this are fitted about 500 more thin laminae, which belong to the coffin bone, both sets being elastic and adherent. The edges of a quire of paper inserted leaf by leaf into another quire will furnish a good idea of the arrangement of the laminae in all the feet, amounting to about 4,000. These are distributed in the most secure manner and in a way that every spring is acted upon in an oblique direction. Verily there is a display of nature's wonder everywhere.

TOO MUCH WORK HURTS PITCHERS

Examples of the Folly of Being "Iron Men."

WALSH'S CASE IS CITED.

Chicago American Star Having Trouble With Salary Wing—Twirlers Are Foolish to Work In More Than Fifty Games a Season.

Does it pay to be an "iron man" in baseball? This question is now being asked on the big league circuit. Many twirlers think it a great honor to pitch fifty or more games a season or two, but in doing so ruin their salary arms. The most recent case is that of big Ed Walsh, the star pitcher of the Chicago Americans.

In 1908 Walsh was the "iron man." He pitched sixty-six games, winning forty, losing fifteen and tying one. What did spitballer Ed do last season? Not very much. He won fifteen and lost eleven games. That record does not compare favorably with that of the previous year, does it? Recent reports say that Walsh's arm is giving him considerable trouble and his career in the majors is short. Of course nobody can correctly prognosticate what Walsh may do later in the season, but if he again pitches star ball he can be regarded as more or less of a marvel. He is close to that in physique now, but the salary arm of the major league baseball pitcher is an entirely separate piece of mechanism from the rest of his constitution.

As the baseball world is aware, an "iron man" is one who can work at least four games a week and be ready to act as the main stem in a double header in between if any are carded to be played. The "iron man" must be always willing to unloosen some of the steel in his arm for the benefit of his club.

Joe McGinnity used to be the last "iron man" in the business. He could pitch a double engagement today and go in and wheel again tomorrow. And he used to win the majority of his games. That's why he was regarded as the best "iron man." Joe did his most superb work when McGraw was erecting permant poles at the Polo grounds. This was over five years ago. Too many "iron man" entertainments made him lose his National league effectiveness. Now he is managing the Newark club of the Eastern league and pitching once or twice a week.

The "iron men" of the fewer baseball era are no longer "iron men." Jack Chesbro, leading pitcher of the American league in 1904, is farming today on a big homestead in New England. Jack is done for so far as the use of his big league arm is considered. He is not beset with any financial worries, because he saved a great deal of what he made in the days of success, but the fact that it was Jack's steady pitching that enforced his retirement from baseball cannot be gainsaid. In 1904 Chesbro was the most and bone of the New York Yankee pitching staff. He would have pitched that club into a championship but for an unfortunate slip of his spitball at the psychological moment in the last and deciding game of the season.

After the momentous campaign in 1904 Jack was pretty near ready for his baseball obituary, although he essayed to pitch until 1908.

Last year Harkness, now with the Cleveland Naps, gunned sixty-five games for Portland in the Pacific Coast league. As a member of McGuire's contingent he did not show any better than many minor pitchers who graduate and not nearly as good as some.

"Stoney" McGlynn worked in sixty-four games for Milwaukee last year. In nearly every game he has pitched since the opening of the present American association race he has been peppered by opposing batsmen. "Stoney" worked too hard in 1909.

A Word For the Tightwad.

In France they have an expressive phrase, "liquid money." It means that part of the family income which is used for the necessities and luxuries of life. It is quite apart from and kept apart from the more serious, substantial part of the income, which is the saved part. In America the entire income is "liquid, and the man who attempts to make part of it solid is called a "tightwad." A "tightwad" is really a man who creates a principal—a capital, in other words—and he is the living example of what every private business must be and of how the country's resources should be handled.—Argonaut.

The Majestic.

The Majestic is now spliting three times each week as well as changing both films each day. This week the McCanns Duo, a young boy and girl who happen to be twins, were the act for Monday and Tuesday and made a hit in their singing travesty act. Emmett & Lower are the team for Wednesday and Thursday in a "Rube" sketch, mixed up with singing, dancing and musical stunts. This is a very funny team. The LaCrosses are among the best when it comes to contortion and acrobatic work, having been featured with Ringling Brothers circus for the last three seasons but this season playing vaudeville dates only. The films shown at this house are the very best giving one comedy and one dramatic film at each show.

The Opera House.

On Saturday night the opera house will open for the great "Johnson in Training." film. This shows the champion in all the stunts he goes through also gives you an idea of the condition he is in. This is the only film taken of the champion and is authorized by Jack Johnson himself. This film is for Saturday night only.

Edward Russell Stock Company.

The members of the Edward Russell Stock company which Manager W. G. Campbell will launch for the summer are beginning to arrive. Miss Grace Bryan, who will be Mr. Russell's principal support, arrived Monday from Minneapolis where she has just closed a successful engagement at the Lyric theater. Miss Bryan, who is by the way, a niece of William J. Bryan, is a charming young actress and will undoubtedly make a big impression. Others of the company will arrive at once and the rehearsals will start this week and the opening bill which the company will appear in here first is Augusta Evans Wilson's great novel, "St. Elmo," which has had long runs in both New York and Chicago. The book is too well and favorably known to need comment and the dramatization is said to be wonderfully clever and follows the book closely. The opening date will be for one night only as the company goes on a short tour which embraces the "Soo" for two weeks and Charlevoix will have the first chance to see the company which will not return for two or three weeks.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Charlevoix County Woman's Christian Temperance Union was formarly called to order in the Methodist church at Norwood at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday, May 17, 1910, with the president in the chair.

Mrs. P. J. Howard of Petoskey, eleventh district president, led the consecration services creating a spiritual atmosphere that was realized throughout the entire convention. Roll call was responded to by three of the county officers and three presidents of auxiliaries, viz., Mary E. Heston, Gertrude Burdick, Mary M. Robertson, Jennie Allcox, Emily A. P. Richardson.

After seating the auxiliaries, Charlevoix, East Jordan and Norwood, (Boyne Falls and Boyne City having no representatives,) adoption of program and naming of committies, Rev. J. G. Biery was introduced, expressing pleasure in meeting Charlevoix county W. C. T. U. workers. Mrs. John G. Biery of Norwood conducted the memorial hour, promoted members being named from East Jordan only—Grandma Leroy, who had been a valiant member for so many years, and Sister Carrie Sheldon who was called to rest after many years of patient suffering and sorrow. A paper, "Under Prohibition rule for one year in Charlevoix county," was ably given by Miss Agnes Porter of East Jordan, convincing her hearers most emphatically that we do not wish to try it again with the saloon in our midst. Following came Miss Coleman with the school children, who gave us an hour of enjoyment with anti-cigarette readings, recitations and songs, after which District President Howard and Mrs. Martha Grigsby entertained the children and the rest of us with temperance talks.

Tuesday evening the exercises were opened by the Norwood choir by singing the "Crusade Hymn," "Give to the wind thy fears; scripture reading and prayer by Rev. A. B. Clark of Barnard; singing by choir followed with greetings in behalf of the village by Hon. John Bugbee, who admonished us to be alert, up and doing in the fight against the resubmission of the local option question. Rev. J. G. Biery being detained at home with illness, Rev. A. B. Clark welcomed us most heartily to the church, Miss Coleman who rules with love at the school house, gave us gracious welcome for the school and our own Emily A. P. Richardson, a charter member of Norwood union twenty years ago, welcomed us to the hearts and homes of the good people of Norwood for the W. C. T. U. A. B. Clark favored us with a vocal solo, "Not a Sparrow Falleth," and Mrs. Grigsby of East Jordan responded for the county in a happy vein. Mrs Cameron sang a solo, "Victories." The address "Prohibition Gains," by District President Howard was full of good points and was listened to with marked attention. Mrs. Grigsby pronounced the benediction.

Wednesday morning Mrs. Robertson conducted the devotionals singing at the close, by request a solo, "My Prayer." After reading the journal unions represented gave reports of work done during the year, Miss Porter in her impressive way sang "If We Only Had Time," which brought forth an encore to which she responded with "No Room in the Inn." Mesdames Richardson, Stafford and McIntyre, charter members of Norwood union, were presented at this time and received the Chatampa sabute from the delegation.

After the report of the treasurer and the auditing and credentials committee, the following officers were elected to succeed themselves: President M. E. Heston, East Jordan; Corresponding Secretary S. M. Wilkinson, Charlevoix; Recording Secretary G. W. Burdick, Charlevoix; Treasurer M. M. Robertson, East Jordan. The district president presented the opportunity for delegates to subscribe for our periodicals—Union Signal, Michigan Union, etc., and Mrs. Grigsby voiced the "Noontide Prayer" ('Tis always noon somewhere, and across the shining continent from shore to shore, somewhere our prayers are rising evermore."

Wednesday afternoon a Bible reading with exhortations to children and parents was given by Mrs. Grigsby and was followed with several earnest prayers. After reading the journal and report of resolutions committee, Mrs. J. G. Biery read a most interesting paper entitled "The Battle Ground of the Three P's—Patience, Practice and Prayer." Mrs. Burdick sang a solo, "Just be Glad." Miss Winifred Maddaugh, a Normal student from Charlevoix, by proxy for Miss Himes, Normal superintendent, read a paper, "Individual Spirituality in the W. C. T. U., written by Miss Lavina Thompson of Boyne City union. Mrs. Reed of Charlevoix recited "I've Drank my Last Glass." The question, Shall we have county superintendents? was decided in the negative. Miss Porter made some remarks on the Medal contest department urging the unions to appoint superintendents and push the work, which was followed by an instrumental solo, "Nearer My God to Thee" with variations by Miss Kathleen Bugbee of Norwood. Greetings were received from the California state convention through the kindness of Mrs. L. E. Mudge, our former county president and from Mrs. Jennie M. Vance of Santa Clara, who had been an efficient member of East Jordan union and a district officer. District President Howard presented Mrs. Biery in behalf of the convention, with a handsome little book entitled "Sayings of Frances E. Willard." Mrs. L. E. Geer extended an invitation to the county organization to hold their twentieth annual convention in Charlevoix in 1911, which was accepted. By motion the unfinished business was left in the hands of the county executive committee.

Wednesday evening—singing "All Round the World the White Ribbon is Twined," bible lesson and prayer, Rev. John G. Biery; anthem, "Hallelujah" by visiting quartette composed of the Misses Stevens and Messrs Jolliffe and Clark; Miss Grace Stafford recited "An Old Man's Story;" by request Miss Porter sang "If We Only Had Time;" recitation, "Warden, Save a Room for Me," Mrs. John Bugbee; solo, Miss Hazel Stevens; recitation, "A Voice from the Poorhouse" Miss Coleman; solo, by request, "Crown Him," Miss Hazel Stevens; recitations, Miss Jennie Stafford, "The Two Wine Glasses," Mrs. J. HIDDEN DANGERS Nature Gives Timely Warnings That No Charlevoix Citizen Can Afford to Ignore.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 1 comes from the kidney secretions. They will warn you when the kidneys are sick. Well kidneys excrete a clear, amber fluid.—Sick kidneys send out a thin, pale and foamy or a thick, red, ill-smelling urine, full of sediment and irregular of passage.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 2 comes from the back. Back pains, dull and heavy, or sharp and acute, tell you of sick kidneys and warn you of the approach of dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Here is proof in the statement of a nearby resident

Mrs. S. C. Miller, Main St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I have been wonderfully benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills. My back ached severely and my kidneys were sluggish. I felt poorly in every way and finally made up my mind to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I procured a supply and soon after commencing their use, I felt better than I had in months. You are welcome to use my name as one who can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly from personal experience."

Why He Could Beat McGregor.

Alexander Lyle, the lord advocate of Scotland, is a keen golfer, and he has a good store of golfing tales. These he is always ready to relate, even if they tell against himself.

Playing on a certain course in Scotland, he remarked incidentally to his caddie: "By the way, I played a round with Todd McGregor the last time I was here. Great player, McGregor!"

"Aye," said the caddie, "but ye could hate McGregor the noo."

"Do you think so?" exclaimed the gratified lord advocate, being well aware of McGregor's prowess.

"Aye," drawled the caddie. "Mc-Gregor's deid."—Golfing.

all defective,' Moran explained as they made their way to the place, the traps to sink and soil pipes being out of order, so that the water was in danger of contamination.

"Not the water you use in making bread?" questioned Haggleton.

"That's the only water we have," replied Moran; "it's the only water John J. gives us."

"Haggleton? What has he to do with it?"

"Just a little—he owns the property."

They stopped before a six story tenement on Market street.

"Careful, now," cautioned Moran. "Hold on to the railing. It's steep."

He led the way down into a deep hole under the street, the iron steps slanting like a ladder and slippery with mud and ice. Haggleton followed cautiously and found himself in a long, low basement lighted here and there by flaring gas jets. As the door opened he felt a hot, foul breath as from a sour and moldy cavern. The air was full of white dust, the walls were damp and greenish white, bare bricks showing in places where the plaster had fallen off, and the wooden floor was sifted over with a pasty mixture of flour and dirt.

It was about 6 o'clock, and already two men were preparing for the night's work, stripping off filthy clothing down to the undershirts and throwing the garments upon convenient flour barrels. The men were pallid and hollow eyed. One, in a red shirt, coughed constantly; the other chewed tobacco.

As Haggleton's eyes became accustomed to the dust and the uncertain

"That's the sick helper," said Moran.

light he discovered a grayish figure lying on a pile of bags behind a steaming vat. It was a man asleep, his head resting on a sack of flour.

"That's the sick helper," said Moran.

"The one who has typhoid fever?"

"We don't know what kind of fever it is."

"But he ought not to be here. He ought not to be sleeping on that sack of flour. You won't use the flour, will you?"

Moran laughed. "The flour he's sleeping on? Sure, we'll use it. We don't mind a little thing like that."

Haggleton took off his coat and prepared to work.

"I'll start you at something easy," said Moran, "down here."

They went to the ovens, where the "third hand" was taking out a batch of finished loaves, about 150 of them ranged along in yellow circles on the hot brick floor. He stood at the iron door, thrusting in a long handled, flat wooden shovel, on which by a quick movement he would slide two or three of the crackling loaves and then draw them out.

"Now," said Moran to Haggleton, "as he takes 'em out on the peel you put 'em in these boxes." He pointed to a pile of wooden trays. "When you get a box full brush 'em over with the stuff in that can. It's potato water, to give 'em a good color."

Moran illustrated this operation once and then left the old man to continue it, which he did to the best of his ability. Occasionally the "third hand" would lay down his peel and stop to cough. Then he would spit on the floor and go back to his work.

"Now run 'em up to the shop," ordered Moran when they had finished—"there, on that dumb waiter. A boy'll take 'em off."

"You're a pretty fair helper," chuckled Moran; "ought to be worth $6 a week."

"More than that," replied Haggleton. "Where did you get the potato water I put on those loaves? I mean the water, not the potatoes."

"There, at the sink. Yes, the one with no trap to it—the typhoid fever sink. You're thinking it won't do people any good to eat that bread. Maybe not. Hub! Now you can do some kneading."

They went to a long trough where the tobacco chewer was in hand to hand conflict with a great mass of dough, three or four hundred pounds, that seemed to writhe and quiver in his arms like a live creature.

"You watch him awhile and then do the rest," said Moran.

Haggleton watched the "second hand" and presently took his turn at the trough and struggled with the dough. For twenty minutes he turned the sticky, sodden mass over and over upon itself, kneading it and crushing it down and tearing it apart until his whole body ached.

"That'll do," relented Moran finally. "What are those brown stains in the trough?" asked Haggleton.

Moran examined the stains and frowned. "That fool has been dribbling tobacco juice in the dough again. Petro," he said sharply, "look there! Haven't I told you to spit on the floor if you have to spit?"

"We'll make a baker of you yet, Jackson," grinned the foreman. "Before the loaves go into the oven we brush 'em over with eggs to get a nice brown. You can do that. Here's the can and brush, and the eggs are in that box. Break half a dozen in the can and go ahead."

Haggleton obeyed, but presently came back to Moran, holding the can at arm's length and wrinkling his nose with little sniffs. "These eggs are bad."

"Are, eh? Well, what do you expect for 30 cents a hundred?"

"I didn't think you would use bad eggs," said the old man.

"You're not here to think, Mr. Jackson. I told you what to do. Now do it."

So the night advanced, and Haggleton worked with scarcely a pause. He rolled barrels and dragged bags as fresh flour was needed; he carried coke for the fires and split wood; he helped at the sponging tubs; he sifted flour; he bent over the kneading trough; he carried boxes; he drew water at the sink; he worked the dumb waiter; he stood by at the ovens, and he never complained. At 10 o'clock he thought his strength had failed him; he was sore all over and sick and weak, but he forced himself to keep on.

At midnight he asked for a few minutes' rest, but Moran shook his head; he must do his work; another batch of loaves was ready—ready for the eggs. The eggs! His stomach at last revolted, and he had a violent fit of vomiting.

"Knocked out, eh?" said Moran. "Lie down there."

The old man lay down on some bags of flour. He groaned, and for a long time he did not move.

Presently Moran came over to him. "It always makes a new man sick. You'll get used to it."

"I hope not," said Haggleton. "Are there many bakeshops like this in New York?"

"Dozens, and some worse."

"Not worse than this?"

"Huh!" retorted Moran. "I'd like to show you one on Allen street, dogs and chickens all about, and—hey, Petro," he called, "roll that barrel here."

Petro rolled over a barrel filled with crumbs of sour bread and moldy dough and sweepings from the floor.

"See that?" continued Moran. "We let it go as garbage, but there are bakers who use it. Yes, sir; they soak it in stuff that takes away the smell, then they dry it and put in currants and molasses and bake it into cakes. And heaven knows who eats 'em."

"That's an outrage!"

Moran leaned toward him with a gleam of hatred. "I'll tell you another outrage, Mr. Jackson—it's when a landlord takes big rent for a rotten cellar like this and won't fix the plumbing. No wonder we're sick. I worked in a cellar bakeshop on Hester street where the plumbing was so bad we got a back flow from the sewer every time it rained hard, and the whole floor was—well, I'll cut out the rest."

"Great Scott!" muttered Haggleton. "But all this must be against the law!"

Moran laughed harshly. "That's fine to talk about law. Why aren't the laws enforced against trusts and railroads? Because somebody has mighty good grafting reasons for not enforcing them. It's the same here."

"H'm!" said Haggleton. "How many bakeshops are there in New York?"

"Twenty-five hundred or so. There must be 15,000 bakers in New York easy."

Haggleton went on quietly, "You say there's a lot of sickness among them?"

"Sickness!" burst out Moran. "Of course there's a lot of sickness! There's rheumatism and asthma and fever and consumption. That's the worst—consumption." He paused, and a grim smile spread over his thin face.

"Go on," said Haggleton.

"You know bread is spongy stuff and takes up anything near it—germs and dirt and bad water. Well, we make the bread, but they eat it—the millionaires!"

"Not this bread!"

"How do you know who eats this bread? How do you know who makes the bread you eat? A quarter of a million loaves and cakes are made every day in New York by sick bakers—that's putting it low—and somebody eats 'em, germs and all. Well?"

"The germs are killed in the baking."

"The heat in the middle of a good sized loaf is away under 200, and it takes 212 to make sure of killing germs. I read how a London doctor tried it and found thirteen different kinds of microbes in a loaf that had been baked! Yes, sir, found 'em alive and kicking!"

Haggleton's face took on such a look of purpose and resourcefulness that Moran marveled and said in jest, "I suppose you're going to show us how to run these bakeshops?"

"Yes," said Haggleton, with a snap of decision, "I think I am."

George Stone Tells How He Became a Sphere Walloper.

BATTERS BORN, NOT MADE.

Browns' Clever Outfielder Says He Had Hard Time Breaking Into Major League Game—Pointers For Batters.

No. VIII.

By GEORGE STONE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Batting, according to the experts, is considered the most important factor in the national game. The ball tosser who can successfully combat the pitchers and get away with two or three safe bingles in each game in the course of the season is looked upon as the most valuable asset to any ball club. To a certain extent I do agree with the baseball experts that batting has taken a scientific aspect. Still, there is a great amount of luck attached to it. In my case particularly I will say that I have in my career in the big league experienced my share of luck with my hitting. I don't mean to say that the majority of my hits have been lucky ones, but a great number of them were.

In order to be an expert batsman it is necessary for the player to be possessed of extraordinary perception, or, better, to be quick of thought, fast as a sprinter and, above all, own a stout pair of shoulders and arms. I went into the American league in perfect condition. I worked at manual labor several years before adopting the game as a profession, and as a result my arms, legs and shoulders were hardened and fit to go the route.

I have not changed my position since the first time a bat was handed to me, some twenty years ago. I was called awkward by my side partners, but despite this supposed handicap I developed into a hard hitter. I was never much of an outfielder. In fact, I aspired to be a pitcher or a third baseman, but the boys wanted me to play the outfield because of my ability to smash out drives at the right moment.

When I went to the Milwaukee club some years ago the experts there criticised my position at the plate very harshly. But nevertheless I led the American association that season with an average that has never been excelled. When Jimmy Collins, then manager of the Boston champions, signed me the know-it-alls opposed me. Manager Collins was informed that I would never make good in the American league, and they told him that I was the poorest outfielder in the country. I admitted this end of it, but was sure that I would prove my ability as a batsman. I was given little chance to show it.

Shortly after, when I visited Boston as a member of the St. Louis Browns, I showed these know-it-alls that I could wallop the sphere. I was lucky enough to maintain a batting average of .400 in every game in which I took part.

In order to be a successful batter you must study and watch every move the twirler makes. From the time he braces himself up to the arrival of the ball in front of you you mustn't move your eye off Mr. Pitcher and the ball. You must watch the ball as a cat does a mouse. The minute you lose track of its course you are lost.

Twirlers have various ways of delivering the ball. Some make a lot of unnecessary motions in order to catch you off your guard. Others cut out the swing and hurl the ball over when you are least expecting it. Then the catcher is always trying to draw you into conversation in order to detract your attention from the pitcher so that you will lose sight of the ball. Keep your ears and eyes wide open. Pay no heed to the man behind you or the pitcher before you. This pair are trying to outfigure you. Remember these things well. If you never lose sight of the ball you will be able to hit it. Of course you may not be as successful as some, but you will succeed. I crouch, as the critics say, like Jim Jeffries does when he delivers a blow. By this I mean I bring my shoulders down on a line with the ball, and as a result when I swing the full force of my shoulders, arms and body is behind the blow stick. The boys say I drive a hard, bounding infield hit. My shoulder motion, coupled with a very sharp twist of my wrists, does this. I practiced this method several years ago upon the lots in Iowa and found it was the best system of them all. I am called a fast runner, but I gain most from breaking fast from the plate. One-tenth of a second gained after hitting the ball wins many a safety for me.

Walker Liebgold Leaves Amateurs.

Sam Liebgold, who for twenty years has been American's most representative walker and during that time won more championships than any other amateur in this country, has decided to leave the amateur ranks and become a professional.

During all his years on the track Liebgold has won over 300 races, nearly all handicaps, and has captured 500 prizes. He is at his best from one to three miles, but can also cover long distances in fast time.

There is considerable excitement in the Farnsworth neighborhood near Mesick over the report of Stephen Crow finding gold on his farm while digging for a gravel pit. While the quantity said to be found is small it is thought a richer vein will develop at a greater depth. It has been pointed out that owing to the fact that the land where the find was 'made' is of glacial formation the find will not develop into anything more than a pocket with the mother lode far to the northward, perhaps in the Hudson Bay county.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

MICHIGAN'S TRIBUTE TO GENERAL CUSTER

ON June 4 next the governor of Michigan, with his staff and military guard, will preside at the dedication and unveiling of a heroic statue in Monroe, Mich., of General George Armstrong Custer, the great soldier and Indian fighter, who died, with his whole command, in that bloody battle with Sioux Indians on the Little Big Horn river, in Montana, on June 25, 1876.

This statue was authorized three years ago by the Michigan legislature and was designed by Sculptor E. C. Potter of Greenwich, Conn., and has received the approval of the general's widow.

Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan will be the principal orator of the day, and President Taft will be present and speak during the exercises. An original poem by Mrs. Carleton will be delivered and a chorus will sing "The Old Brigade," while the surviving members of the Custer brigade will march by and cover the statue with flowers. The brigade holds its annual reunion the day before and will participate in the dedication exercises June 4.

In Center of Four Public Squares.

The monument will be located at the corner of First and Washington streets in Monroe and in the center of four public squares, facing the county courthouse. It could not be duplicated today for $50,000. The cost releasing, the veil will be drawn at the proper moment by Elizabeth B. Custer, the widow of the general.

GENERAL GEORGE ARMSTRONG CUSTER.

General Custer was born at New Rumley, O., on Dec. 5, 1839. He began his military career at the age of four years. His father belonged to the militia, which compelled every able-bodied man in Ohio sixty-seven years ago to assemble for muster in uniform once a month. He frequently took his son Armstrong, and as he was so young he was very noticeable among so many mature men.

It occurred to Father Custer that a uniform would be a delight to the child, so he had one made like his own by the village tailor in great secrecy and took his little son home in it to his surprised and proud mother. The miniature Continental coat has disappeared, but the waistcoat and breeches were kept by his adoring mother for over half a century.

A Sample of His Pluck.

With these regimentals and carrying a tiny wooden sword he marched beside his father and seemed to understand that courage must go with the uniform.

One night a tooth began aching furiously, and his father sought the doctor, who, as was the cruel custom at the time, twisted out the tooth with forceps. It did not bring forth a whimper from this small son of Mars. When commended for his pluck he said, "Father, we could whip all Michigan!"

At that time there was trouble about the boundary line of Ohio and Michigan and very serious talk of fighting to settle the question. But no one realized that the child had heard the hot discussions, much less understood that one state was pitted against the other.

"My Voice Is For War."

His older brother had learned a speech of an orator of distinction from the school reader and spouted it at home before the day for its delivery at school. To the surprise of his parents one day the little soldier stood at attention, imitating the elocution and gestures of his brother, and piped out, "My voice is for war!"

Such precocity was too much. In his father's estimation, to be confined to a home audience, and the next minister day the child, in uniform, was lifted to the counter of the village store among the militiamen and, waving his sword, announced what proved to be the watchword of his future.

General Custer graduated at West Point in 1861 and was made second lieutenant of a company of the United States cavalry, with which he was present at the first battle of Bull Run. He captured the first colors taken by the Army of the Potomac and distinguished himself in several battles, rising step by step to the rank of major general of volunteers in the civil war. In July, 1863, Custer was made lieutenant colonel of the United States regular cavalry, with the brevet rank of major general, and was thereafter engaged in frontier service, fighting gallantly in many battles with the Indians until his death.

AMERICA'S OLDEST SHIP.

The Polly, Which Is to See New York, a Terror of British In 1812.

The good ship Polly, which recently left New Bedford for New York, is the oldest vessel in the United States and one of the oldest in the world. For 105 years this two masted schooner has been doing business, but even now she can outsail many modern vessels.

The Polly's laurels are not all those of peace. In the war of 1812 many a time she gave battle on the seas to craft twice her size. She captured eleven rich prizes in that conflict. As a privateer under command of Captain Jedidiah Upton, with her decks bristling with guns, she was the terror of British commerce.

The Polly dropped out of the binocular limelight to bob up in 1840 in the coasting trade. In 1849 and the succeeding years the little smartly rigged sixty footer rounded Cape Horn six times and made two complete trips around the world.

Of recent years she has been carrying lumber between Bangor and other Maine ports. While the boat has been almost remade, it's the same old Polly, and if you had been interested in shipping a century ago you would have no trouble in recognizing her now.

The minority who have square chins and big lower jaws say that we of the receding chins have neither will nor strength of character, which is absurd, as any one may know who remembers that General Wolfe and Mr. Pitt had practically no chins at all, to say nothing of living soldiers and statesmen. To judge a man by his chin is no less foolish than to judge him by the bumps of his skull.—London Spectator.

TO FAST FOR FORTY DAYS.

Dr. Gayer Thinks Only a Water Diet Will Improve His Health.

Dr. Gustave A. Gayer, president of the Society For Applied Psychics, of 131 West Sixty-third street, New York, began the other day a fast which he hopes to be able to keep up for forty days. At any rate, he is going to try to do without food for three weeks. He hopes to be able to demonstrate the value of fasting not only as a body cleanser, but as a means for improving the condition of the subconscious mind and giving the forces of life some opportunity to gather themselves and gain strength. Several physicians will watch the doctor carefully and make examinations from time to time. Dr. Gayer has made fasting experiments before, but for not longer than two weeks.

"During my fast I will sleep out of doors," said the doctor. "This will be no new experiment, however, for I regularly sleep in a tent in my back yard winter and summer. Water will be the only sustenance I will take until the fast is over. I expect to lose considerably in weight, yet it cannot help but benefit me physically."

MEETING HARDSHIPS.

There is no hardship ahead of us in life that may not be made easier by our doing the hard thing of today with unflinching faithfulness. And every hardship that lies ahead will be the harder to meet by any failure of ours in today's test.

BELTS MADE OF STEEL.

Advantages They Possess Over Those of Leather.

In Germany steel belts are used in many large factories and electric power stations. The principal difficulty connected with their employment is in joining the ends of the belt, says the Scientific American. These ends are now provided by the makers with steel plates, which need simply to be screwed together. It is necessary to use steel of special quality and temper. It is advantageous to cover the belt wheels with coarse canvas, to which thin slices of cork are attached, in order to prevent slipping. The cork lasts practically forever and reduces the sliding to less than one-tenth per per cent of the travel. Professor Kammerer has experimented with a steel strap two-fifths of an inch wide and one-fiftieth of an inch thick, with two wheels eight feet in diameter, for the transmission of sixteen horsepower, with a tension of 440 pounds. Although the wheels were not covered, they worked very silently, even at a speed of 200 feet per second. The maximum slipping was 1 per cent of the travel, and the loss of energy due to this cause was inappreciable.

Steel belts possess the following advantages: The energy is transmitted without slipping and almost without loss. The belts do not stretch. Their width may be reduced to between one-third and one-tenth of that of leather belts transmitting the same power; consequently the wheels may be narrower and lighter and the workshop less darkened by them. The steel belts do not deteriorate appreciably. They may be used in damp places and do not appear to be attacked by smoke or acid. They allow the attainment of velocities of 100 feet per second and are consequently very suitable for use with turbines. The required tension is one-tenth less than that of leather belts transmitting the same power because of the difference in weight, from which results an additional economy owing to the diminished friction on the bearings. Much room can be saved by using steel belts, because their efficiency does not depend upon their length. They can be used horizontally in place of gearing. The makers assert that they cost less than leather belts of good quality.

The oldest steel belts have been in service two years. In a Berlin factory a leather belt twenty-four inches wide was replaced by a steel belt four inches wide which transmits about 250 horsepower. The belt after two years' use shows no indication of wear. The only objection to steel belts is that they are not easily seen and consequently may cause accidents if they are not carefully guarded.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Was one of Unrivaled, Unsurpassed Magnitude

REPORT OF DELEGATE E. S. STACKS

Enthusiasm Reigned at Every Session.

Every Nation on Globe Represented—Convention was Spectacular at all Times—Michigan Took Prominent Part.

Unprecedented for its cosmopolitanism, unequaled in the magnitude of its constituency and unsurpassed as a spectacle, the World's Sixth Sunday School convention in Washington, D. C., May 19-24, marks an event in religious history. President Taft was not alone in expressing amazement over the size and character of the convention. He looked out over a sea of six thousand faces on the opening night, while outside the convention hall, a still larger number of persons congregated unable to enter. Nearly twenty-five hundred of the official delegates wore red ribbon badges with the legend, "North America." Some five hundred others wore blue badges bearing the names of more than fifty different nations as remote as China and South America, Turkey and Australia. In addition three thousand official and representative delegates from every state and province in the United States and Canada, and from foreign lands, there were about seven thousand unofficial delegates or visitors. Sometimes three and four simultaneous convention sessions were inadequate to hold the throngs.

It was a spectacular convention. The great men's bible class parade on the afternoon of May 20th, opened the eyes of Washington to the virility and masculinity of modern religion. In order that some members of congress might march in the parade—as they did—and that others might witness it, Congress adjourned early on the day of the demonstration. Torrential rains immediately proceeded and followed the parade, largely reducing the ranks. Nevertheless five thousand men in a bannered procession, a mile long, marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, and were received at the capitol by a throng of ten thousand persons. Of the five thousand in line Michigan had forty-eight and with her yell, "Rah, Rah, Rah, Rah, Rah, Rah, Michigan my Michigan, and the following song with an unestimated number of verses but all the same wording, we let Washington know what state we were from. It reads, "I love her, I love her, Michigan My Michigan, and when we get through, we'll go back to Michigan My Michigan." After being seated in the convention hall when E. K. Warren of Three Oaks, Michigan, ex-president, the only man from the United States that has held that position came to the platform to preside, the Michigan delegation stood and gave their yell and sang their song and to say that "we made a hit" is putting it mildly. All these men belong to the Sunday school and the thought uppermost in the minds of many of the spectators, who lined the sidewalks, was expressed on one banner, "Where the Men Lead the Boys will Follow," and there were many temperance banners in the line also

At Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal church at 9 a. m. Monday, W. C. Pierce made a masterly appeal for the Sunday school workers to assist in banishing the saloon, as did also our Prof. F. S. Goodrich, of Albion college, field secretary of our state association, who presided over the temperance departments. A huge mass-meeting for men, with ringing speeches, by Rev. Dr. Homer C. Stunz and Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, followed the parade. At the same time two big meetings of women delegates, were in session. Another spectacular feature of the convention was a great open air gathering on the east steps of the capitol, when a multitude of people, joined in the singing of Christian hymns.

The demonstration accorded President Taft and Mrs. Taft, whom the former introduced to the cheering throng, as the real president, stirred the nation's chief executive greatly. He declared his belief in the fundamental importance of religious training of the youth of the nation, through the Sunday school. The convention sat with a monster map of the world before its eyes, the official button showed the globe with a red cross superimposed thereupon. Part of each day was given to roll call of nations. The ends of the earth came together at Washington. Strikingly the note of peace resounded from session to session, the depth of conviction upon this subject which possessed the delegates, made the gathering worth to rank among the great peace conferences. On the closing night of the convention there was a tableau of seventy-five children reproducing the pictures, which this convention has made famous. The twentieth century crusaders, the children of many nations, gathered under the Sunday school flag. At the same time delegates from many lands, Korea, China, India, Japan, Mexico Brazil, Turkey, etc., gathered on the front of the platform and all sang together, to the same tune, but each in his own tongue, one of the familiar Christian hymns, that is sung the world around.

The statistics of the convention were presented at this time, the flag of each nation being added to a display stand as the figures from that land were given. The total showing is 27,888,479, members of whom above 16,000,000 are found in the United States and Canada, this includes 2,500,000 officers and teachers, the number of schools reported being 285,842. All ages from octogenarians and other adults by the million to infants on the cradle roll and in the kindergarten departments are now found in the Sunday school. This vast company is scattered over the habitable globe, the increase in non-christian lands being especially noteworthy. Various factors combined to make the convention a missionary occasion. Many distinctly missionary addresses were made, the presence of several hundred missionaries helped, so did the missionary and educational exhibit. The realization that the agency which deals with childhood is the most potent evangelizing force contributed powerfully, the wide spread observance of World's Sunday School day, in more than two hundred languages and dialects, as apostive to the convention by cable from various lands was a real missionary factor. Literally thousands of sermons upon the religions training of youth seem to have been preached upon that day.

For the first time in its history the World's Association tried to raise a budget for the expense of the ensuing trienium. The sum asked for, $5,000, was all secured in a few hours. This will be used largely in placing field workers in foreign lands to develop the Sunday school idea organization. The convention sessions were too numerous to be mentioned in detail. On Sunday afternoon there were twenty-five and on Sunday night over a hundred, all with regularly appointed speakers from a wide area. Convention hall holds six thousand persons and it was packed mornings as well as evenings and the simultaneous sessions often overflowed also.

Frequently the convention broke up into sectional conferences. Especially notable among the speeches were those of President Taft, Dr. S. Parkes, Cadman of Brooklyn, John Wanamaker, Rev. S. M. Zwemer of Arabia, Bishop J. C. Hartzell of Africa, Mr. Robert E. Speer and Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Rev. Dr. F. B. Meyer of London, who presided, had a profound influence upon the convention. The retiring chairman of the executive committee, Dr. George W. Bailey, was elected president for the next three years and Mr. E. K. Warren of Michigan, executive chairman. The convention voted to hold the next—the seventh—session at Geneva, Switzerland, Europe. Because of its size and representative capacity and because the delegates were for the most part middle aged leaders in Christian work and also because of the new notes of the world peace, world Christianization and virile allegiance to the bible, the convention will doubtless exert an extraordinary influence over the immediate future of all the churches.

For the Members of Baxter Woman's Relief Corps

Rain Prevented Carrying Out a Full Program Memorial Day

The following is the report of Baxter W. R. C. for May.

The fifth a thimble party was held at Agnes M. Jarvis'. Result; a good time, a pile of carpet rags sewed and money enough for Mother's Day and Children's Day.

The Saturday before Mother's Day, each old soldier was presented with a white carnation to wear Sunday, in memory of his mother and in honor of American mothers.

At our regular meeting May 12, the committee that were appointed to confer with the business men, reported an amount contributed by them to fully cover expenses for flowers, etc., for which our thanks are rendered.

On account of the rain the program for the thirtieth was omitted and only the G. A. R. and W. R. C., headed by the band, proceeded to the cemetery to decorate the graves at the repetaph. The boys in Blue, with true chivalry, excused the ladies and did the honors themselves. After the work at the cemetery all returned to the I. O. O. F. hall to enjoy the good dinner prepared by the ladies, and the band concert afterward. The absent boys were not forgotten for a word of cheer, a basket of good things and a tiny flag were sent to each by their comrades.

JEFF'S STUNTS DISAPPOINTING.

Reports From Rowardennan Do Not Satisfy Sporting Public.

TOO MUCH RELAXATION.

Big Fellow Should Do More Sparring In Order to Bring Back the Quickness of Eye—Actual Training Narrowing Down.

By TOMMY CLARK

Reports from Jim Jeffries' training camp at Rowardennan vary so much from day to day that it is next to impossible for any one to get a correct line on the real condition of the former boilermaker from newspaper reports. That the grouch that Jeffries is charged with harboring has much to do with the unfavorable reports which are sent broadcast is no doubt true, but there may be reason, too, which warrants these statements. One day Jeff is as good as he ever was, and the next time he goes through some stunts he shows plainly that he is not in form.

Jeff's desultory style of training has not been altogether pleasing to the followers of pugilism who have been watching from day to day the reports that emanate from Rowardennan. While it is conceded that the ex-champion and his trainers are in a position to know better than anyone else what the big fellow requires to condition himself, there is another side to the story.

The old question of whether Jeffries will be able to stand up under the strain of a fight was to have been answered in part by his work in camp. That work has not been such, however, as to give any true line. It is quite true that he has done a world of road work, that he has toiled conscientiously in the handball court and gymnasium and that upon occasions he has worked furiously with the gloves.

There has however, been too much relaxation mixed in with the boxing to satisfy people. For every day that

Jeffries has boxed he has laid off two and perhaps three, and of actual sparring he has had little or no work. In short, the stories from Rowardennan have been so regularly of a layoff and a trip to this place or another that suspicions have been aroused as to whether Jeffries dares to go to work in real earnest.

His preliminary exercising has been well and good, but it is high time that he take serious thought of his boxing, for a man so long out of the game as Jeff has been needs to regain that judgment in hitting and that quickness of the eye that cannot come otherwise than with the gloves. Since he settled down in the mountains it has been announced that after the middle of June there will be no boxing lest there might be an accident to his hands.

That means the time for actual training is narrowing down. At the outside, Jeffries has not more than a month for actual work. He can afford also to do his work more in the open and where the crowds can see him.

It is all very well to designate the newspapers as the eyes of the public, but when there is too much secrecy the masses are quite apt to imagine things that are not so. All in all, it behooves Jeffries to get down to serious business and let his friends know just where he stands.

CHAPTER IX.

HADDLETON TAKES COMMAND.

MORAN jeered at Haggleton when he announced his determination to throw up the job. The millionaire, however, had selected Sunday morning to make an announcement of importance.

"You asked me that first night," he said to Moran, "if I was going to show you how to run these bakeshops, and I told you that I was. Well, I am going to do it. Listen, all of you. I am going to take you in with me."

"Not me," said Gentle.

"I am going to listen to what he has to say," was Philip's answer.

Haggleton saw that he had won a victory—he had succeeded in interesting Philip.

"If you're not in a hurry, Moran," he remarked as they finished breakfast, "I'd like to ask some questions. Does your boss make much out of his business?"

Moran shook his head. "When he's paid rent and wages there's just enough left to take care of his family—in a tenement."

"What's the rent of that basement?"

"Thirty dollars."

"Suppose I offered him the basement rent free and guaranteed as much business as he does now. Do you think he'd go into a scheme I've got?"

"Ye-es."

"Well, there's money in these bakeshops—money for all of us. What kind of a man is your boss anyway?"

"Italian—once a ragpicker."

"H'm! Can he be manager?"

"He can if he wants to," growled Moran, "but you've got to show him first."

"I'll show him right."

"Huh!" grunted Moran. "What do you know about running a bakeshop?"

Haggleton smiled. "What do you pay for flour?" he asked.

"Six or seven dollars a barrel."

"Whom do you buy it from?"

"Jobbers."

Haggleton looked at him steadily, his eyes showing half pity, half contempt. "No wonder you people are poor! You—you don't know any more about business than children in the street."

Haggleton asked more questions, going into details of the breadmaking industry, wages, methods of work, cost of equipment, etc., moving rapidly from point to point, until presently he came upon one fact of master importance—that there was a machine for kneading dough, a machine run by electricity which would do the work of six men and turn out better bread than could be made by hand.

"Ah," exclaimed the old man, "now we're getting at it! I'd like to see that machine."

"You'll have to go uptown to a big bakeshop."

"None down here?"

Moran scowled. "A machine like that costs $650."

Haggleton looked pleased. "Good! Now, how many bakeshops are there near yours, say within two or three blocks?"

"Eleven."

"That's enough. We'll make a combination with six or eight; we'll sell them flour for less than they pay the jobbers and—"

"How will you do that?" interrupted Gentle.

"We'll get it by the carload direct from the mills. Then we'll have one of those machines and do all the kneading for the combination. We save on wages and materials; we do a bigger business because we sell better bread, so we make money both ways."

"It's a regular trust," said Gentle.

"Yes," admitted Haggleton, "it's a bakeshop trust."

"What capital have you got?" asked Philip.

"Ever hear of promoters?" asked the millionaire tersely. "Well, I am promoting this. The bakers need that machine; the manufacturer is perfectly willing to supply it on terms that guarantee him his money, even if he has to wait for it. A chattel mortgage given by the members of the trust I am about to organize will be good security unless I am much mistaken. I could use $300 to advantage right now."

"Three hundred dollars!" sniffed Moran. "What can you do with that?"

Haggleton bared his teeth like an old wolf. "With $300 you can get a grip on Manhattan Island and—never let go, if you know how."

Philip was deeply impressed. He was stimulated, yet vaguely alarmed. Haggleton was awakening in him qualities of mind and vague longings that had lain dormant thus far and that he recognized now with some uneasiness. He had sometimes wondered if he possessed business ability, but had given the matter little thought, feeling sure that his work lay in quite another field. So it was with strangely mixed motives that he exclaimed impulsively:

"I can furnish the $300!"

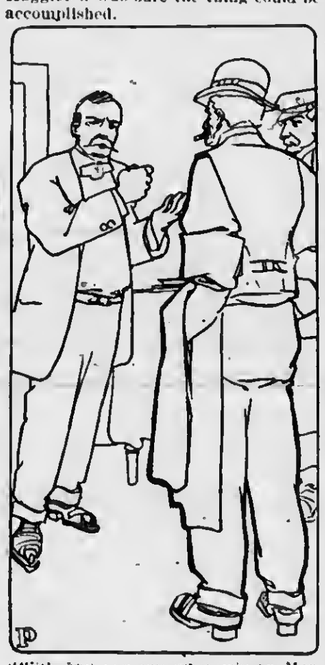
Haggleton suppressed the feeling of exultation that rose within him as he recognized himself in his son. He quietly said, "That will hasten things somewhat."

In the morning Philip was to buy one of these kneading machines, paying $100 down, the balance being arranged for in successive monthly payments, secured by a chattel mortgage. He—Haggleton—would get the bakers to be jointly responsible here with them.

Then Philip must find a bakeshop with electric street connections for the machine. Did Moran know of one? Yes, in Catharine street. Good! They must get the boss there into the combination, show him all the advantages and, if necessary, give him a bonus. The kneading machine must be set up there. It wouldn't cost this man a cent, as the combination would assume all expenses.

The rest would be easy. Six other bakers must agree to buy from the combination thirty or forty barrels of flour a week, or whatever quantity they usually bought, on the express stipulation that they got it at 10 per cent off the jobber's price. And they must make themselves responsible for this amount of flour, so many carloads, by signing a joint note payable to the mill owners in thirty days.

Philip thought that the mill owners might refuse to accept such a note, but Haggleton was sure the thing could be accomplished.



"With $300 you can get a grip on Manhattan Island."

"How can one machine knead the dough from half a dozen bakeshops?" reflected Philip.

"That's easy," said Haggleton; "we'll have a horse and truck."

"What—to carry the machine?"

"No, to carry the dough. Each baker will mix his own flour in his own sponging trough, and then we'll put the troughs on a truck and haul them to the place where we run the machine. When the flour is kneaded we'll haul them back."

"How long will the kneading take?" questioned Philip.

"Ten minutes for one batch of loaves," answered Moran—"say 100 pounds of dough. That's with the machine. It would take a man an hour."

"You see what we save," remarked Haggleton.

"Are these troughs on wheels?" pursued Philip.

"Sure," said Moran.

"Allowing half an hour for each batch," calculated Haggleton—"I mean for kneading and hauling both ways—that gives us twenty-four batches in twelve hours—say 4,000 loaves. That's 8,000 pounds of flour, four tons a day, or twenty-eight tons a week for the combination. There's a nice profit in that when you get it by the carload."

"It sounds good," mused Philip, "but are you sure of enough bakeshops for the combination?"

"We'll have six before the week's out—that is, if you fix it so that we're trusted for flour by the carload. You'd better get busy."

Philip turned in surprise.

"That's right," said Haggleton. "We look to you to get us flour direct from the mills. We're going to cut out the jobber's profit."

"And you're going to risk all in this scheme?"

"What are we risking?" answered the old man. "Flour has a permanent value, and so has a kneading machine."

"Suppose these bakers refuse to join your combination?"

"Refuse? Does a man refuse good money if you offer it to him? Why, within ten days all the little bakers around here will be offering premiums for a chance to come in with us."

Meanwhile Haggleton had not forgotten that other boast of his that he would make the neglected Moran home as clean and orderly as a New England farmhouse.

The iron beds had been replaced by sleeping couches, neatly covered; the cooking stove was hidden behind a homemade screen, Joe's handiwork, and all around the room ran shelves with muslin curtains, behind which were kept the many things that formerly had littered the floor and been piled in corners, in hopeless confusion. Under one of the couches a tin bathtub was snugly put away. It was the pride of all but Moran, who looked upon it with disdain.

Brightened though her life now was in many external ways, Jenny passed her days in profound unhappiness. She loved Philip—oh, how she loved him! Yet how could a man love a girl from the Haymarket? Still, she was pretty, very pretty at her best, and, after all, Philip was a man! The taint of her past was seared in her soul. She thought that she knew men and their besetting weakness! She was pretty! she knew. But, alas, what availed her beauty if it made no appeal to Philip? Ah, that was the point! Perhaps it did appeal to him. Several times she had felt his eyes on her in a way that—well, she could not be sure; he was finer than most men.

Then there was the evening when, believing her absent, he had entered her bedroom. How he had started back in confused apology, although there was really no offense. Every one knew that there was no privacy in a tenement, so why make such a fuss over a glimpse of bare arms and shoulders?

These reflections had gradually led her to conceive a definite plan—she must talk to Philip alone, she must find some way of getting him to the flat in the afternoon when the others were away. She could never ask him herself—that would spoil everything. Joe must help her in getting him there.

This plan was busily working in her brain one morning shortly after the launching of the bakery trust as she and Joe were setting things to rights in the room and discussing Mr. Jackson's achievements.

Joe suddenly startled Jenny with a momentous announcement:

"Say, Jen, beginning today, I draw ten bones a week if I cut out pool rooms."

"How?"

"In the bakery scheme."

"The bakery scheme," repeated Jenny thoughtfully. "That's what Phil is talking about all the time now."

"Phil listens to what Mr. Jackson has to say, all right. He takes a lot of interest in him."

"Yes, he's here most of the time." Jenny looked at the diver's picture on the wall, her eyes widening a little.

"You remember what I told you, Joe?"

"About Phil? Sure. Little Jenny wants him all to herself. And if she can't have him for herself then the trained nurse lady that took away our dear little star boarders to the hospital had better look out for herself.

"I will tell you one thing," he observed. "If I was Miss Margaret you'd not see me driving below Twenty-third street.—No, ma'am.—I'd make brother cough up. He's got nothing but money, or his wife has."

"How do you know that she has a rich brother?"

"Why, you know it too."

"I do not!"

"Why, Jenny, weren't you nurse for his kid?"

"Good God!"

Jenny stared at him with startled eyes, then shifted her gaze beyond him. She began to walk up and down restlessly, gesticulating, muttering to herself.

"What's the matter?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing! You say Miss Margaret is the sister of Howard Lawrence, up in Sixty-third street?"

"Yes."

Suddenly Jenny stopped. She had reached a decision. The time had come to put her stratagem into execution.

"Well, what about Lawrence?" asked Joe.

"Oh, nothing. I thought it strange that—that his sister should be here among us. That's all."

"Is it?" thought Joe. "Not by a long shot. You can't fool me."

"What time is it?"

"Half past 10."

"Listen, Joe," pleaded Jenny. "You said that you would help me. Now you must. I want to be alone with Philip. I have an idea."

"I will help you."

"I want you to write Phil a note," explained Jenny feverishly. "Tell him that you are in great trouble and must see him at once here. And tell him to come alone—do you understand, alone?"

Poor Jenny's thoughts flew back to her bitterly won knowledge of the old life she had left for Philip's sake. She was beautiful; she knew it! He should know it too. Her beauty and this strange discovery which she had suddenly made concerning Margaret Lawrence's relationship—she held two cards now. She would play them!

Joe read her thoughts fairly accurately. Whatever it was that she knew about Howard Lawrence was to be [illegible] love, or at least to weaken Margaret's hold upon his affection.

"But say, Jenny," said Joe, "what is there in it for me? I am not asking you to give me money—I'm only asking for the loan of a dollar until I begin to draw my salary from Mr. Jackson." She gave him the money.

"Make the note strong," she said. "He must come."

Joe reassured Jenny and hurried away.

Haggleton entered briskly and found Jenny gazing fondly at the picture of his son.

"He's a fine young fellow, that Philip Ames, isn't he?"

"Phil? Indeed he is, but if anybody tells you that he is ca., to understand"—

"Gentle seems to understand him."

"Gentle thinks he does. Say, Mr. Jackson, you have Gentle worried, all right."

"I? How?"

"Oh, with all this bakeshop business. Before you came it was nothing but the wrongs of the poor. Now it's nothing but money making schemes."

"You think Philip is interested?" he asked casually.

"Interested? You know he is interested. Why, yesterday, Gentle was trying to talk tenement house reform to Phil, but he hardly listened. He was figuring out the profits of that electrical machine for kneading bread."

"Good!"

Haggleton was immensely pleased.

"I never saw Phil that way before," continued Jenny slowly.

"You like him, don't you?"

"Everybody likes him. I love him." Jenny continued:

The Farmer and His Bank Account

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need of a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year he may pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money.

Literary Notes

A Brave Front to the World.

"If every pair for whom wedding bells are to ring this June," says Margaret Sangster in Woman's Home Companion for June, "would take to heart the thought that their private affairs are their own, not to be told to outsiders and not paraded to the world, they would insure and safe guard their self-respect and the permanence of their home. The temptation may arise when first there is a little friction to seek sympathy from mother, sister or intimate friend. That temptation should be trampled under foot. Confidential friends are not invariably to be trusted. With or without the best intention the third party intruding in the affairs of a married couple is in peril of making mischief. Make it a rule to confide wholly without secrets or reserves in one another from the hour that you become husband and wife, and you will have little to fear, though the four winds should blow around your house. It will stand against any tempest and prove itself strong and hallowed, your sanctuary and your castle if if you confide in and defend your sacramental union. Never let a quarrel last overnight. Present a brave front to the world. There is common sense in the homely advice to put the best foot forward. Don't begin by thinking that you must have everything on the same plan as your neighbors. Live within your means, although your living be of the simplest. Try to save a little each week or month toward coming days when expenses may be larger. Much comfort is theirs who are aware that they have laid aside a provision against accident, illness or an unlooked-for occasion. May heaven bless the young married folk who set forth together in this year of grace. May they live to celebrate their golden wedding and live together, loved and honored, years after that splendid meridian."

CAUGHT ON THE FLY

Manager Dahlen came within an ace of sending Pitcher Cy Barger back to the minors. Boston wouldn't waive on him. Now he's one of Brooklyn's winning box men.

"Mathewson has lost some of his speed and 'stuff,'" is the verdict of the Philadelphia players. "Three Fingered" Brown is another star who seems to have "gone back."

"Against a right handed pitcher I crowd the rubber and step into a curve before it breaks," says Ty Cobb. "Against a left hander I drop back as far as possible and wait for the curve to break."

George Mullin points out that one of the recruits on the Detroit team is twenty-eight years old and that he (Mullin), having started in baseball at nineteen and having served nine years, is no older than that "youngster."

Manager Fred Clarke is quoted as saying of young Vincent Campbell: "He is one of the fastest I have seen in several years. I have been hunting a man to take my place, and Campbell looks like the boy for the job. He has me beaten now, but I am not ready to quit."

A NATIONAL MINE BUREAU

Great Opportunity In Front of New Department.

SAFEGUARDS FOR WORKERS.

United States Authorities to Investigate All Possible Causes of Mine Accidents and Methods Best Adapted to Most Shaft Dangers—Shot Firer That Eliminates Risk of Lives.

The machinery for the investigation and prevention of great coal mine disasters like the Cherry fire in Illinois at last has been provided by congress. President Taft has signed the law passed recently by both houses of congress to establish a national bureau of mines in the interior department, and the work of organization of the bureau will be begun soon.

Officials of the geological survey declare that no branch of the United States government will have opportunity for greater work in the preservation of human life and the protection of property from waste than the new bureau.

The facts demanded by a Chicago paper immediately after the Cherry disaster and called for by Senator Cullom of Illinois in a resolution he introduced in the senate in December, 1909, showed that the government mine rescue stations covered only a portion of the mining region of the country and that federal experts had no authority to investigate any mine disasters except those caused by explosions.

What New Bureau Will Do.

The great work that has been done in this line by the geological survey has proved the need for money and authority for the government to undertake further investigations and experiments to supply absolute data and adequate safeguards for workers in every branch of the mining industry. Mine explosions which the government now investigates constitute only 15 per cent of the accidents that happen.

The new bureau of mines will take over from the geological survey the work of testing explosives, investigating explosions, experimenting with fuels and the testing of structural materials, in which work the government has been spending $350,000 annually for two years.

It will add to this the investigation of all possible causes of mine accidents, determination of causes of fires and like disasters, investigation of character and action of gas, dust, damp and other dangers existing in coal and metal mines and methods best adapted to meeting these dangers and protecting mine workers against them.

No Interference With State.

State mine authorities have raised objections in the past to the establishment of a national bureau of mines on the ground that it would result in a conflict between state and federal authorities. It is made clear under the new law that there is to be no attempt on the part of the government to regulate mining operations or to interfere in any way with state inspection.

Thousands of lives are lost in American mines because of lack of uniform systems of signals, standard methods of using fuses and explosives and efficient methods of mine rescue work. This lack will be supplied, it is believed, through the investigations and recommendations of the new bureau of mines. Mine rescue stations at Pittsburg, Urbana, Ill., and other points have demonstrated their great value in the protection of life and property.

The most hazardous work of the hazardous occupation of coal miners is the firing of the blasting powder, or, as it is known to miners, "shot firing." The men who do this work are similarly called "shot firers." They enter the mine after the miners have completed their day's work and gone home. Invariably the shot firer rushes his work, firing shots rapidly, creating large quantities of gases caused by the ignition of large charges of powder. Then comes an [illegible] shot or badly judged shot, causing what is known in mining parlance as a "windy shot," thus providing all the elements for an explosion, which invariably occurs, causing loss of life and damage to property.

Recently there was patented an automatic electric "shot firer" by Charles I. Dodson of Kansas City, which, after being put to the practical test of a thirty days' trial in a large mine near Pittsburg, Kan., has been recommended by the United States geological survey. The apparatus takes the place of the "shot firer" and renders unnecessary his services in a coal mine, thus eliminating one of the greatest dangers to life and property in the mining industry.

The machine is a complete electric plant and has no outside assistance. It consists of a specially constructed clock and self exciting direct current dynamo, with specially constructed mechanical parts. The machine is made to operate by inserting a key and pulling up a ratchet bar, which on being released by the clock at any time desired closes the circuit of the armature of the dynamo [illegible] with [illegible] charges of current [illegible] shots or blasts [illegible]

LONG HIKE FOR ENNIS.

Connecticut Man's Attempt to Lower Weston's Transcontinental Record.

John Ennis of Stamford, Conn., sixty-eight years old, who recently started on a transcontinental walk from New York to San Francisco in an effort to lower Edward Payson Weston's record between these two cities, took a swim in the Atlantic ocean at Coney Island before starting and will take one in the Pacific at the end of his trip.

Ennis will attempt to make the trip over Weston's trail in 100 days. If he succeeds he will establish a new record in walking westward across the continent, because it took Weston 105 days to reach the Pacific ocean.

As a long distance walker Ennis has already made a name for himself, having defeated Dan O'Leary and Weston in January, 1908, by walking 110 miles in 22 hours 10 minutes.

Ennis was born in Ireland and came to the United States when a small boy. He is known as a great walker and rides only when obliged to. It is said in Stamford that Ennis has never been seen wearing an overcoat, and his wiry figure is a familiar sight striding briskly along on the coldest days.

But it is not as a walker alone that Ennis has made a name among athletes. He has won many prizes as a skater and has saved thirteen lives by his expert swimming.

SUNDIAL FOR COLUMBIA.

To Be Made of Granite, and Accurate, Too, In Fair Weather.

The class graduated from Columbia college in 1885 will give Columbia university, in New York city, on June 1, commencement day, a granite sundial, said to be the only one of its kind in the United States. The plans for the dial and a small working model have been made by Harold Jacoby, professor of astronomy and a member of the class. When completed the dial will consist of a granite sphere five feet in diameter mounted on a circular granite plinth some ten feet in diameter. On the surface of the plinth will be marks by which will be designated the actual time of day at every season of the year.

The dial, according to Dr. Jacoby, will probably be the best timekeeper in New York as long as the sun shines, but it will be subject to the failings of all other sundials when there is no sun.

by local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

At the May meeting of the Intermediate Valley Fruit Grower's Association, held at the beautiful farm home of H. M. and F. H. Heinstreet, some eighty people were present. Excellent talks were given by John I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, Carlton W. Scott, manager of the John Western lands in Milton township and by other active members of the association. The influence of location on successful fruit growing is shown in the orchards of the Messrs. Heinstreet. Cherries on their farm giving promise of a fair crop and thus holding good both as to early and late varieties. Enthusiasm for fruit growing, notwithstanding the reverses of an unfavorable season, is growing rather than diminishing and the association developing a mighty impetus toward better conditions and a greater prosperity for this region. The slogan being that Antrim county rightly deserves to rank among the best fruit regions of the state.

The association is all the time adding new members and its success and influence is extending far beyond the confines of Antrim county.

All of its meetings are good meetings simply because its members are enthusiastic and recognize that we have a bonanza equal to the most famous regions of the west or east.

Up to June 1 more iron ore has been shipped from Marquette than for the same period in the history of local shipping. Since the season opened, April 20, 348,019 tons of ore have been shipped from the L. S. & I. lock as compared with 55,557 tons up to the same date in 1909. From the south shore docks 220,500 tons have been shipped since the opening of the season, a considerable increase over the shipments up to this time last year. This unprecedented large early season shipment has been due to several causes chief among which is a more active demand for ore on the part of the furnace interests than for many years. Ever since last fall the furnace people have been placing contracts for ore and the opening of the navigation season found a large percentage of the available tonnage tied up. Again the ice went out of the lake much earlier than in 1909 and by the time the insurance went into effect a large part of the lake fleet was ready to take on the first cargo. Shipping was in full swing practically a month earlier than last season.

An Eagle representative looked over the flying machine belonging to Chas. Augustine Thursday, and with him explaining the points and wires of the aeroplane it looks good for some good flights. Mr. Augustine has a very neat looking aeroplane which is of the monoplane type and is a beauty, being of the model made by Bleriot.

The engine for the machine has been ordered and will be here next week in all probability. The engine is made by the E. R. Homes Motor company of Denver, Colo., and is of the regular aeroplane type. It is a seven-cylinder affair, each cylinder developing five horsepower. The cylinders are so arranged that they swing around the crank shaft, thereby being air cooled, and the huge fan which pulls the machine is entirely clear of the machine. This engine will be tried in the machine and the whole motor only weighs 110 pounds.

A race between two flying machines is being planned for the Fourth of July, and it would be one of the most interesting things that ever happened in the city. If the race cannot be arranged before in time for the Fourth it will take place later.—Traverse City Eagle.

Voting In Spain.

Voting in Spain is held to be a duty to the community, not merely a privilege of the individual, and neglect of civic obligations entries its own penalty. Male adults of legal age and under seventy, with the exception of priests, notaries and judges, are required to vote in municipal elections. Failure to cast a ballot is punishable by having one's name published as censure for neglect, by having taxes increased 2 per cent, by suffering a deduction of 1 per cent in salary if employed in the public service and for the second offense the loss of right to hold elective or appointive office.

His Landscapes.

A nouveau riche recently attended a picture sale. A friend who had noticed him at the sale asked afterward, "Did you pick up anything at that picture sale, Jorkins?" and the other responded: "Oh, yes; a couple of landscapes. One of 'em was a basket of fruit and the other a storm at sea."

Rather the Other.

"Don't you know that tune? I forget the name of it, but it goes like this." And he whistled it.

After he had finished his friend turned to him with a sigh. "I wish to goodness you had remembered the name and not the tune," he said.—Lippincott's.

Exactness in little duties is a wonderful source of cheerfulness.—Faber.

GOOD NEWS

Many Charlevoix Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Charlevoix are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands upon thousands of people are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

T. J. Unior, 820 S. Union St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Two years ago I gave a public testimonial in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills and today I can recommend them just as highly as I did then. For several years I was afflicted with kidney complaint and though I doctored faithfully and took a number of so-called kidney cures, I found but little relief. I had often heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and as I had seen them recommended by local people, I decided to give them a trial. I procured a supply and I was astonished at the result of their use. In a few weeks Doan's Kidney Pills entirely relieved me and since then I have been free from kidney trouble. I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past year or so. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case, benefit has been received."

WADDELL'S PITCHING DAYS MAY BE OVER.

It looks like curtains for Rube Waddell, the star pitcher of the St. Louis Americans. The great southpaw twirler whose eccentricities have made him a byword among baseball fans may never pitch again. Waddell was struck on the left arm by a pitched ball in Boston recently and the bones in the elbow fractured. Attending surgeons fear that the pitching arm will never be able to work again. Erratic and uncertain, Waddell was, with all his faults, one of the best southpaws who ever shed a ball up to a batter. He had everything in the curve line. It has often been said of him that if he had been gifted with the brains of Mathewson he would have been the king of pitchers. Connie Mack managed Rube better than any other manager, and the Rube responded by pitching the Athletics into a couple of pennants. If he ever had a sore arm no one heard of it, but there was never any telling whether Rube would appear at the ball yard or go on a hunting or fishing trip. In Houston this spring Rube renewed his antics, and Jack O'Connor had a heart to heart talk with him. O'Connor told him he would either keep in shape and give his best services to the Browns at all times during the season or he would be released. O'Connor meant it, too, and the Rube kept close to the lines.

TYRUS COBB'S DEBUT.

"Duckey" Holmes Tells of Famous Player's First Big Game.

William ("Duckey") Holmes, manager of the Toledo team in the Eastern league, is one of the veterans of the game who has been in the limelight for the last decade and a half.

In that time experience has given Duckey many set views on the acts of ball tossers and the qualifications which they have to be successful. Duckey has a fund of dope stored away in his cranium which he gathered during his sojourn about the country, and one story which he likes to tell is that relating to Ty Cobb's debut in the American league.

"I played in the first game in which Ty Cobb participated in the major leagues," declared Holmes the other day.

"It was in 1904. He had just joined the team and was playing center field, and I was in the left garden for the Chicago White Sox. You never saw any one in your life who had stage fright worse than Cobb.

"He faced Doc White, one of the best left handed jeggers that ever worked in a box. Doc shot them over fast and mixed them up. He struck Cobb out four times. After the game while we were in the bus going back to the hotel I said to Fielder Jones, manager of the White Sox at that time, 'That Cobb kid handles himself in fine style.'

"'Yes, he looks good,' said Fielder, 'but he can't bat.' Every one joined in the chorus 'Naw, he can't bat.'"

"Yes, he is changed. And this sort of encourages me."

"How so?"

Jenny stumbled on.

"You have made me see," the young woman was saying, "that there are two Philips—the one Gentle knows and the one you know."

She gazed at the picture.

"Yes," she added, with a contented smile, "that's it—two Philips. You have waked up the one that Gentle does not know. Why shouldn't I"—

"Two Philips? What a strange fancy!"

Haggleton spoke merely to make her go on.

"I tell you there are two Philips," she insisted. "One Philip loves this trained nurse. What's the matter with the other Philip loving me?"

She smiled up coalidiagly.

"Here is a new complication," thought Haggleton—"still another battle to be fought over Philip!"

"Do you really think that you can win him away from this girl?" he asked.

The answer staggered him.

"Do you really think that you can win him away from Gentle?"

What did this young woman know? Not that he was Philip's father, of course. But the rest of it she had gauged pretty accurately by intuition, no doubt.

Jenny began to pay her compliments to her hated rival.

"She makes me tired with her airs, and she ain't strong for you, Mr. Jackson," she added viciously. "When I met her I saw that she didn't care for me, and she doesn't know anything about me. You do, though I never told you."

"I have guessed a little, Jenny. I respect you all the more for your grit in returning here."

"Do you? I am glad of that. Well, this Miss Margaret ain't so much of a much herself. It was her brother that put me on the downside."

"Her brother?"

"Yes, the brother of the girl Philip is going to marry—this stuckup nurse! I've a good mind to tell Philip."

"Her brother is not her fault."

"No, I suppose he's mine. But I am going to tell him."

"Do you think that would be fair?"

"All's fair in love."

Haggleton looked at the firmly closed mouth and doubted his ability to persuade her.

"You know I like you very much?" he asked.

She nodded.

"And I admire you, Jenny, for your pluck and your honesty. You are a good woman notwithstanding what is behind you—a fine woman. Are you going to do a mean thing and disappoint me?"

"Is it mean?" she asked.

"You know it is. You will lower yourself in your own eyes and in the eyes of all of us. It would be unworthy of you."

Jenny sat silent.

"I won't tell," she finally said. "I will play fair. I do it only for your sake."

"You do it because you are the fine woman I knew you were."

He bent forward and kissed her lightly on the cheek. She furtively wiped her eyes.

"But I am going to fight for my other Philip to the end," she declared defiantly, "just as you are going to fight for yours."

"That's understood. Now, Jenny, something else. When this bakeshop scheme comes off you'll get eight a week. We're going to brighten up your life and your father's."

"There is only one thing that can brighten up my life, and father—well, he has no hope for the future."

"Ah, yes, he failed in business?"

"He had an oil business in Iowa. But the trust couldn't let us go by. John J.'s wagons undersold us at our own door. Now father is a helper in a cellar bakeshop."

"That is the law of business, Jenny—the survival of the fittest."

"Yes, I suppose so. But it's hard to prove that to those who don't fit."

CRUDE ASTRONOMY.

Russian Peasants Have Queer Ideas of Sun, Moon and Stars.

We have it on no less authority than that of Cæsar that the Druids taught their disciples many things about the form and dimensions of the earth and the heavens and a body of doctrines on the motions of the stars. Even death itself was to them an astronomical fact. They held that from this life we pass to take up our abode in one of the heavenly bodies. That they firmly held to this belief is manifest from the fact that they had no objection to lending money to be repaid in the other world. They looked upon the passage of life in much the same way as we regard a journey across the Atlantic.

There is no doubt that even now in various parts of Europe the views of the peasantry as to the heavenly bodies and celestial phenomena have changed but little from those of their predecessors of a thousand years ago. A Russian contributed to the bulletin of the Astronomical Society of France has given the results of his observations on this point extending over ten years. The astronomical lore of the Russian peasantry of the north, center and south is limited to a knowledge of the existence of the sun and moon, of three constellations, of the Milky way, of one planet, of comets, shooting stars and meteors. The sun is to all a mysterious and beneficent being.

The moon covered with ice and snow is ever in flight from its brother, the sun. Upon its disk may be seen unmistakably portrayed the murder of Abel by Cain, the latter being done to death by a pitchfork. Chill are the lunar rays, and woe betide the child of man who shall sleep unprotected therefrom! From the horns of the crescent much useful information as to the forthcoming weather may be derived by the learned in such things.

The stars are lamps or candles which are lit and extinguished daily by the Eternal. A shooting star is the soul of one who has just passed away. Comets are heralds of war and famine. No Russian ever forgets that the Napoleonic war followed the great comet of 1811.—Westminster Gazette.

MALIBRAN'S CAPTIVITY.

A Romantic Incident In the Career of the Great Singer.

The following incident is told of Mme. Malibran, whose voice once upon a time excited the most euromantic to folly.

She was resting in her dressing room at the theater after singing in the part of Desdemona, her passionate soul still quivering with the emotion of the part and the tears and applause of her listeners. A person entered and begged her to go to her mother, who had been taken ill. A carriage, not her own, was at the door. She was whirled through the streets and led, much to her surprise and fear, into a strange house and to an excellent boudoir, hung and carpeted with rose colored silk.

Here the beautiful songstress was left alone after being assured by her attendants that her mother was well, that the message was a subterfuge and that her captivity would last until she sang something.

On a low seat sat a lyre such as that which thrilled in Malibran's fingers as she sang Desdemona's touching song.

At first she determined to resist, but after a short time her mind reverted to the evening, and almost unconsciously she took up the instrument and sang the "Romance de Saule." As she concluded sounds of enthusiastic applause and trembling accents of delight came to her through the silk hangings, and she was then conducted by liveried servants to her carriage and to her home.

The next morning she found on her table a casket containing a magnificent pair of earrings, and inside the cover, written in diamonds, was the word "Merci." But the event remained a mystery to her forever.

Retort Filial.

In a warm argument one of the contestants had a poor case, but he defended his position vigorously.

"Oh, yes," the other one chuckled, "you have your defense, but you've lost. Losers always have their defense. Lincoln used to illustrate that with a story about his boy Tad.

"Lincoln and Tad were lunching one day in the White House.

"'Don't eat your fish with your knife, boy,' said Lincoln sternly. 'It's not polite.'

"'But, father,' said Tad, 'is it polite to stare at folks when they're eating?'"

Very True.

A grandmother was reproving her little grandchildren for making so much noise. "Dear me, children, you are so noisy today! Can't you be a little more quiet?"

"Now, grandma, you mustn't scold us. You see, if it wasn't for us you wouldn't be a grandma at all."—Harper's Weekly.

Why Lulu Was Happy.

ATHLETICS LOOK LIKE WINNERS

Connie Mack's Team the Sensation in American League.

PITCHERS IN GRAND SHAPE.

Bender, Morgan, Plank and Dygert Are a Formidable Quartet—Infield Could Not Be Improved On—Outfield Going Good.

Stop Connie Mack and his band of Philadelphia ball tossers, and make a race of it is the slogan all along the American league circuit. The Athletics are the sensation of Ban Johnson's circuit this season, and the team given every evidence of being a flag winner.

Connie Mack says that his 1910 team is the best string of ball tossers that he ever had in hand, and he has led some formidable Athletic teams in his career.

The Athletics have been hitting the ball hard, fielding in dazzling style, and the pitchers have shown great strength, but more than anything else

1. SCENE IN RECENT GAME. 2. PITCHER PLANK. 3. COLLINS. 4. CATCHER LIVINGSTON.

they have been playing the game intelligently. Brains and baseball ability, when mixed, form a combination that is hard to beat, and the Athletics appear to have these qualities.

Last year the Mack men would have won the pennant if they had played better baseball in the early hip of the race. But this early weakness was really a blessing, for it showed Connie that he had to make a big change, and this he did, with the result that he has the present powerful lineup. Mack has a number of topnotchers, whose work stands out above all, yet the others, if less conspicuous, are good enough to make a well balanced machine.

In Collins and Baker the Athletics have two of the surest hitters in the country. Collins is a most baffling customer for a pitcher to combat, for he seems to be able to do almost anything with a ball. On the paths he is both fleet and cunning. Baker is a homeric hitter of the Sam Thompson school. He puts tremendous force behind his swings, and when he meets the ball right it travels like a projectile. Barry fits in nicely at short.

On the first corner Davis, although along in years, is faster than three-quarters of the young first basemen and the superior of most at hitting, while in headwork only Chance, the Chicago first baseman, is his equal.

If Mack's outfield was a trifle weak last year it is vastly improved this season. Dan Murphy is the same old sure catch in right and also a powerful hitter. The veteran Hartsel has picked up wonderfully this season and is in the thick of the run getting. Oldring is also showing steady improvement and playing with his old time confidence and dash. Behind the bat Thomas and Livingston wear well. The pitching staff has star performers, men who have been under fire and are reliable.

Plank and Krause are easily the best pair of left handers in the country. Atkins is another coming portsider, while Coombs, Morgan, Dygert and Bender, who recently pitched a no hit-no run game against Cleveland, are a formidable quartet of right handers.

There is probably no other team in the fast set so well fortified with brilliant—not merely fair—extra material. McInnes, the kid infielder, is a wonder and no mistake.

Rath is another swift infielder, while Strunk, the extra center fielder, is so good that he may land one of the regular positions in the outfield. Heitmuller, big and brawny, can murder a left hand pitcher and is invaluable in pinches. Jack Lapp, the third string catcher, is a good one.

A whole ton of press notices will not win a pennant, but it is no use hiding the fact that Mack has a wonderful team this year. Barring accidents, it is certain to be a pennant competitor to the finish.

Barnard Grange No. 689.

Barnard grange met in regular session Wednesday evening with about thirty members present.

After transacting the regular business we had a short program after which we repaired to the basement where the ladies served ice cream and cake.

All members are requested to be present next meeting as there is special business to transact.

Harmony Grange No, 1451.

Another Grange has been added to the list of farmers' organizations in Charlevoix county. It was organized in March by John A. Newville, who was elected Master with O. D. Willson Lecturer and L. D. Willson Secretary. The neighborhood has always been a particularly harmonious one and as harmony is one of the essentials of a successful grange it was decided to call the new Grange "Harmony Grange."

Although the membership is small the attendance at the regular meetings which are held the second and fourth Tuesdays in each month, has been good and the lecturer ably supported in his efforts to have an interesting program at each meeting consisting of the discussion of some timely farm topic, with music, recitations and select readings as "side dishes."

Ant or last regular meeting there was a debate on the question: "Resolved that the raising of cucumbers for the pickle factory is more profitable than raising potatoes." W. C. Burdick led the cucumber forces and H. L. Willson defended the potato as a money crop, and while this was a bad year for the potato raisers, it was the general opinion that the champions of the cucumber failed to prove that they could make more one year with another than could be made raising potatoes.

We had an open meeting last Saturday evening with a full house, at which the subjects of alfalfa and the value of co-operation among farmers were the leading features and a lively interest was shown. J. A. Newville, who is one of the pioneers in Grange work in this part of the state, talked on the Grange as a medium of co-operation and H. L. Willson discussed the question in a general way.

The subject of alfalfa raising brought out a lively discussion led by O. D. Willson, our Worthy Lecturer.

Our next regular meeting will be held June 14, at which one of the principal subjects will be the progress of the movement for a Parcels Post.

A delegation from Harmony Grange will attend the Pomona at Ironton June 23.

WALTER JOHNSON, WASHINOTON'S STAR PITCHER.

everything that a great twirler needs—control, curves, cool head and more speed than any pitcher in the country.

Since he became a member of the Washingtons several years ago Johnson has twirled first class ball, but owing to poor support by his team at critical moments he has lost more games by one run than any other pitcher in the country. Place him with a club like the Cubs, Pirates, Detroits or Philadelphias and there is little doubt that he would come pretty near leading the winning pichers in the country.

BENDER'S FEAT TWELFTH NO HIT GAME PITCHED IN AMERICAN LEAGUE.

The shutout without a hit of the Cleveland Americans by Albert Bender, the full blooded Chippewa Indian pitcher of the Philadelphia Athletics, was the twelfth no hit game of the league. Young, Joss and Frank Smith have each pitched two such games, Young and Joss having the honor of not allowing a man to reach first base. The record follows:

1902.—Callahan, Chicago versus Detroit, Sept. 20.

1904.—Young, Boston versus Philadelphia, May 5; Taunehill, Boston versus Chicago, Aug. 17.

1905.—Henley, Athletics versus St. Louis, July 28; F. Smith, Chicago versus Detroit, Sept. 6; Dineen, Boston versus Chicago, Sept. 27.

1908.—Young, Boston versus New York, June 30; Rhoades, Cleveland versus Boston, Sept. 18; F. Smith, Chicago versus Athletics, Sept. 20; Joss, Cleveland versus Chicago, Oct. 2.

1910.—Joss, Cleveland versus Chicago, April 20; Bender, Athletics versus Cleveland, May 12.

WINANS' CLEVELAND STABLE.

Siliko and Allen Winter Will Be Watched on Grand Circuit.

Among the prominent stables which will be trained this spring at the North Randall track is that of Louis Winans of Brighton, England, the first stable from across the water to invade the harness horse tracks. This stable is in charge of Al Pennock, a former well known Ohio trainer, who for several years has raced the Winans horses in England and on the continent.

The star pair are the $50,000 Derby winner, Allen Winter, 2:09¼, and the Kentucky Futurity winner, Siliko, with a European record of 2:08¾. Two or three European bred horses are also in the string, and they will be raced in the slow trotting classes on the grand circuit.

There will be a lot of interest taken in the reappearance of Siliko on this side. His first start will undoubtedly be in the $2,000 2:09 trot at the grand circuit opening meeting at Kalamazoo.

VERY FEW WERE IN ATTENDANCE

At Meeting of the Fruit Growers' Association

HELD IN THIS CITY LAST WEEK

Mr. Gibson's Address was very Instructive

Soil Preparation, Location, Proper Planting, Soil Drainage, Air Drainage and Many Other Problems Discussed.

The regular meeting of the Charlevoix Fruit Growers' Association was held in VanPelt's hall, Tuesday afternoon, June 7th. The meeting was called to order at 2 p. m. and while the attendance was small only about twenty-five being present, the meeting was one of the best held and those who were not present to hear Mr. Gibson missed a very valuable address on the subject of fruit raising.

Mr. Gibson reviewed the matter of preparation for planting very thoroughly and made it very clear that the successful orchardist must inform himself on many points such aa soil preparation, location, proper planting, soil drainage, air drainage and many other points.

A crop of potatoes is a good thing for ground that is intended for orchard in order to get the ground in good condition for setting but it ia unwise to grow farm crops after the orchard has been set. Small fruits such as berries can be profitably raised between the rows while the orchard is growing but should be taken out when the trees begin to bear.

He says that it is best to avoid damp heavy soils as they produce a rank growth that is not good for fruit production. A careful study of the effects of the frost this year will convince any grower of the necessity of care in avoiding locations containing pockets where the air drainage is not good. In some of the western states fire pots have been used to a good advantage in preventing frosts. This may in time be introduced in this locality and much of the land that is too frosty for profitable culture may be made to grow good crops.

Mr. Gibson says that there is really very little land in Western Michigan that will not raise good fruits but advises growers not to attempt the use of steep hillsides where neither moisture or fertility can be retained. Experts in the selections of commercial varieties, seem to agree that the Dhchess, Wealthy, Wagner and McIntosh Reds are good ones and that the growers who raise these varieties, will make no mistake. The matter of variety is an important factor and no grower should set an orchard of any kind of fruit without first informing himself as to the varieties that are best adapted both to the market and the community in which they are to be grown.

Mr. Gibson spoke at some length regarding the buying and care of stock. Says to be sure that the nursery is reliable. To avoid tree peddlers. Send orders to several nurseries and ask for bids. Insist on getting one year old trees. Two or three year old stock is very often the culls from the one year olds. Do not allow the nursery to substitute. Order trees unpruned or pruned with heads low. Take care of the trees when you get them. Keep the roots damp. Prune severely. Cut injured parts of roots away. If trees seem dry bury entire tree in damp earth for two or three days. Do not expose roots to wind or sunshine even for a short time.

As to distance in planting the following was given: Apples 40 feet except the smaller growing varieties which may be 30 feet, peach and plum 18 feet, pear 20 feet, sweet cherry 25 feet, and sour cherry 15 feet.

In pruning he advises very strongly against the "cow tail" method of the "tree butcher" that is so much in evidence in many of the orchards of Michigan. Branches trimmed long and slender with a tuft of twigs left on the end. This method leaves but very little chance for fruit to start and places it in such a position on the tree that the winds will thrash it off before it can mature. When a tree has been injured it should be pruned or cut back according to the injury. When pruning one should remove all dead and broken limbs. Branches which cross and injure each other, limbs which are too close together, those which have grown too strongly and tend to overbalance the top of the tree, bushy growths and long slender branches should be taken out.

Trees must have sunlight and air and it is a good idea to take those things into consideration and look the tree over well and make up your mind what you are going to do with it before you begin the work. Dead limbs can be removed at any time but the early spring is the best time for general pruning.

The man who has an acre of orchard and is not sure that he knows just how it ought to be pruned, can well afford to travel a goodly distance to attend an orchard demonstration where instruction in this work is given.

Full and detailed information on the subject of spraying can be obtained by consulting bulletin No. 51, March, 1910, issued by the M. A. C. Spray, spray, then spray again is the key to success. One must study the history and characteristics of the insect and vegetable pests that are to be destroyed, in order to successfully follow directions of any kind in this work.

Regarding cultivation Mr. Gibson says that in general a plow is out of place in an orchard. A spring harrow is good but care must be taken not to injure the roots. A disc harrow is the best orchard tool. Frequent and shallow cultivation if best. Do not allow the weeds to grow, whatever the method may be and do not cultivate after August 15. Mulching can be made to take the place of cultivation to a large extent but the mulch must be heavy enough to assist in retaining the moisture.

In conclusion Mr. Gibson certainly stated a fact when he said that the only way to succeed in this work was to give one's attention to it and that it was the heighth of folly to set fruit trees on a farm and then attempt to make a living by farming the ground thus occupied for the man who tries this will find that neither the farming or the fruit will pay him.

E. B. Ward, who is secretary of a new organization which has been formed and will be known as the Straits of Mackinaw Apple Belt association gave a short talk outlining the aim of the organization. The aim of this association will be to secure a market for the fruits raised by the members by being able to guarantee to the buyers that the products are properly graded and packed. The members will be taught proper methods in packing and grading fruit and it is intended that when a label of the association is seen on a box of fruit that the buyer may know that he need not be afraid that the box will contain a row of good fruit on top and that the rest of it may be culls.

Mr. Ward will send literature to the members of the company association explaining the method and intention of the new organization.

The next meeting of the association will be held in Boyne City on Saturday, June 25. We hope that the growers will attend the meetings in the future more than they have those that have been held.

TOWNSEND OPENS HIS CAMPAIGN

In Speech at Battle Creek Thursday Night

MAKES ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLATFORM

Upon Which He Asks Election as United States Senator

Believer in Progressive Policies, Parcels Post, Pension Law Changes and Economical Administration of Government

Congressman Charles E. Townsend opened his campaign last Thursday night, with an address before the Battle Creek Townsend club. He gave the platform on which he seeks the office of United States senator and promised to abide by the decision of the voters at the primary. Congressman Townsend announces his platform as follows:

The election of United States senators by the people.

Insurgency against improper legislative methods.

Business methods and economy in administering the government

Proper control of corporations.

Conservation of natural resources.

Local parcel post.

Tariff commission.

Adequate pensions.

Roosevelt-Taft policies.

"If the people really desire to so express themselves," said Congressman Townsend, "they should insist that the members of the legislature observe their wishes. They can do this by demanding that every candidate for legislative honors shall declare himself in advance of the election as being willing to abide by the advisory vote of the state, and any candidate who will not so declare, himself should not be elected. We want no repetition in Michigan of the disgraceful experience in Illinois.

"I desire to repeat what I have said heretofore, namely: If my opponents receives more votes at the primaries than I receive I want him to have every Republican vote in the legislature for senator and I hope that he will make a like declaration—a positive declaration that if I should receive a majority in the primaries in the state he wants me to have every Republican vote in the legislature.

"I firmly believe that the representative who exercises his best judgment and refuses to be led, contrary to his judgment, by the regulars, so called, on the one hand, or by the insurgents, so-called, on the other, is the man who best serves the people. The spirit of insurgency was born of the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. It is today a living, moving force, and, if it follows the channel marked by judgment and common sense, the result cannot be other than good. I firmly believe in the conduct of business through the agency of corporations properly regulated and I shall not hesitate to lend my influence and support to such measures as will be fair to the people and to the corporations. I am for the 'square deal' for fair play and for proper regulation.

"Great advances along the line of economy have been made, not the least through the civil service system, but there is still opportunity for great improvement. There is too much division of responsibility in the different departments of the government, each striving for ap-

PATRICK HENRY KELLEY

One of the Candidates for Republican Nomination

For the Office of Governor of the State of Michigan.

Lieutenant Governor, Patrick Henry Kelly of Lansing, was born in Cass county, Michigan, October 7, 1867, of Irish parentage, and removed to Watervliet, Berrien county, when eight years of age. He obtained his education in the district and public schools, supplemented by a course in the Valparaiso, Indiana, normal school, being graduated therefrom in 1887, and after completing a two years' course at the Michigan State Normal, was issued a life certificate by the state board of education. Mr. Kelley has held the position of principal of schools at Galien and Hartford, and served five years as superintendent of the Mt. Pleasant schools, in 1894 to 1899, when he entered the law department of the University of Michigan and was graduated in June, 1900. Since September, 1900, he has been engaged in the active practice of his profession at Detroit and Lansing. Mr. Kelley is married and has three children—Anna V., Philip Henry and Katherine Frances. He was appointed a member of the state board of education to fill vacancy caused by the resignation of E. Finlay Johnson in April, 1901, and was elected to the same position November, 1902. Mr. Kelley has always voted the Republican ticket and takes active parts in the campaigns. He was the unanimous choice of the Republican state convention, held in Detroit June 30, 1904, for the nomination, and was elected superintendent of public instruction, November, 8, 1904 he was nominated lieutenant governor under the direct voting system and elected November 6, 1906.

Since that time he has successfully filled the office and has been an active member of the Republican party for years. His services to the state have been of the first quality and if the voters of the state see fit to make him governor of this illustrious state he will do as he has previously done, work to the best interest of the people.

JULY FIFTEENTH SEPTEMBER FIRST

National Boy City Open between These Dates

CITY GOVERNMENT FOR THREE WEEKS

Judge Brown has been Busy all the Winter

Big Delegation will Come from New England and from Other Parts of the United States.

This unique municipality of boys, for boys, and governed by boys, will resume civic operations July 22. From that date until August 18, the city will be in the hands of its embryo politicians, will govern itself, hold an exciting campaign and election, have its own water works and electric lighting plant, listen to its own band, produce a circus, "such as Barnum never had," swim, boat, fish, play ball, hike across country, listen to chautauqua lecturers, see moving picture shows, sleep in tents, run its own bank, grocery and postoffice and conduct its own church, camera club and newspaper.

Although the organization by wards into a city will not continue longer than three weeks, the grounds will be open for the boys' use from July 15 until September 1.

Boy City is the culmination of Judge Willis Brown's life's dream. Judge Brown is known as the world's champion believer in the inherent goodness of all boys. He has toured the country pleading for a better understanding of boy nature and demonstrating his theories, and last summer he founded National Boy City on the shores of Pine lake, one and one-half miles from Charlevoix.

Boys from twenty cities became citizens of Boy City. Two brothers came with twenty dollars, remained three weeks and went home with nineteen. Others succeed in partially paying their expenses by entering some line of Boy City business. Each group from a city constituted a ward and elected its alderman. Other city officers were chosen and a police force appointed. All city employees and officials received a small salary.

Boys brought their tents and provided their food and cooking facilities or secured them at cost. What was was known as "The Mutual Eating Association" engaged a cook, bought a stove and lived on about two dollars a week for each member, there being about forty in the association.

Dr. J. D. Elsom, professor of physical training at the University of Wisconsin, was, and will be, in charge of the athletics. Each citizen will be examined before he is allowed to take severe exercise and an expert swimmer will be on watch during bathing hours.

The moral welfare of the boys will be cared for. Last summer the church numbered among its members, catholics, methodists, lutherans, baptists, jews, episcopalians, presbyterians and congegationalists. Its creed was simple: "I will

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY NORMAL CLASS

Commencement Exercises held Tuesday and Wednesday

O R. CHARLES B. HOYT SPEAKER

On Subject "The Work of the True Teacher"

Members of the Class gave Class Day Program at the Congregational Church Tuesday Evening.

The Normal commencement which was held in the Congregational church last Tuesday and Wednesday evenings was a very delightful affair.

Tuesday evening was given up to the members of the class for the regular class day exercises. Each member of the class took some active part in the program and the rounds of applause from the large audience showed very plainly that their efforts were appreciated and that these young people were clever actors in their chosen line.

We cannot here make mention of the performance of individual members of the class, some of whom gave orations, some conducting recitations and others in song, but all of them acquitted themselves in an excellent manner and those present enjoyed the evening very much.

On Wednesday evening the church was crowded again and at eight o'clock as the strains of the graduation march floated out on the air the sixteen young ladies and one young man, members of the class of 1910 marched to the platform followed by the Normal faculty and the speaker of the evening, Dr. Hoyt of Ypsilanti.

The first number of the program was Dr. Wilkinson's delightful reodition of "The Earth is the Lord's" which put the audience in a splendid humor to listen to the address of the evening.

Very few people in this community knew very much about Dr. Hoyt but it is a safe assertion that those who were fortunate enough to hear his address will not soon forget him.

His delightful rendering of the story of "The Other Wise Man," and his manner of applying the thoughts of the story to the life of the teacher pleased everyone.

Following his theme, "The Work of the True Teacher," Dr. Hoyt outlined what the aim of the teacher should be and what the result will be if their work is well done, mingling an occasional well chosen anecdote of school life in such a manner that almost before those present were aware of it an hour had sped by.

Mrs. W. J. Rachow sang a beautiful solo after which Commissioner Milford made a short address and presented the diplomas. The last number on the program was a chorus by the class which was very nicely rendered

The members of the class and their friends spent a very delightful hour following the program at an Alumni reunion in the Normal rooms, refreshments being served by the class of 1909.

PAYTON A CANDIDATE

Will Ask A Re-nomination at September Primary.

County Clerk Payton authorizes us to announce that he will be a candidate for re-nomination, on the Republican ticket, at the September primary.

Mr. Payton is filling his first term as clerk, and few, if any, counties have a superior officer in that position. An enthusiast in whatever he undertakes and a believer in the principle "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well," his work as director of the West Michigan Development bureau, since its organization, has been the means of vastly increasing the value of Charlevoix county real estate.

Energy, hustle and a belief that "public office is a public trust" are Mr. Payton's characteristics and, if successful in September, we can confidentially predict that he will be found among the leaders in November.

A FLEA INQUIRY.

A reader of these notes living near Quinton, N. J., writes stating that he has lately moved on to a farm which is overrun with fleas and stating that he will be eternally grateful for any suggestion which would aid in getting rid of the pest. The writer's experience with fleas has been very limited and he is mighty glad of it, judging from what he has been able to glean through other folks' trials with them. However, inquiry made of those who have run afoul of them has resulted in a suggestion or two which may help our good friend out of his trouble. One is stubbing a few sheep in the infested quarters and then marketing the sheep; when the fleas will be on the other fellow, which, of course, is the prime consideration. A method which proved effective on another ranch which harbored millions of them, with headquarters in a dry wagon shed, was the scattering of wood ashes inside the building and then giving the place a good wetting down with water. The friend who relates this instance states that if an infested place is shut up tight and no animals allowed to enter it the fleas will die off. We offer this last for what it is worth. It is plain that fleas prefer dry and sandy places and seem to thrive there best; hence a wetting down of such places after scattering ashes would seem to be at least a partial solution. Doubtless a fumigation of infested places with fumes of sulphur or formaldehyde would be valuable. Another tells us that when one's clothing is inhabited with the pests the only way to have peaceful sleep is to disrobe on the back porch, shake out one's underclothing and nightrobe, and if an attack is made during the night to repeat the operation out of the window. The writer will keep this flea business in mind, and if he learns of anything more effective than the methods suggested he will give his readers the benefit of it.

A PLEA FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Many of the saddest and most heartrending of life's tragedies might be averted were parents to recognize the responsibility which is surely on their shoulders of informing their children in the early years—far better too early than too late—of the chief facts in connection with their physical origin and the dangers incident to ignorance of the vital facts. Find out about these things boys and girls will—if not from pure and reliable then from vulgar and untrustworthy sources. Perhaps the victim is a fair young girl, whose confidence has been betrayed and whose bright and happy life is blasted at its threshold, or maybe it is a stalwart son, who finds out too late through agonizing experience that he is a virtual imbecile or is tainted for life with some loathsome disease which may mean early death, but in any event must always debar him from those joys which center in a happy home of his own and a life of wholesomeness and usefulness. The teaching of these truths in the home and in the school is of far more account than mathematics, history or language, yet they are almost universally and most stupidly ignored. As a people we are devoting too much time and energy to material things—the shop, the office, the farm; too much time to horses and cattle, to sheep and swine, their breeding and their rations—and far too little thought to the boys and girls and their problems, on whom more than all other things or interests the future welfare of the country depends. The boys and girls are worth while. It is time they were given a square deal.

Quite accurately the spread of the root system of shrub or tree is indicated by its visible spread of branches. This should be of aid in pruning roots and branches at the time of transplanting and also in the cultivation and care of trees after they are set, including the growing of tilled crops in orchard tracts.

Now and then one runs across a fellow going by the name of farmer who will let the stock go thirsty on a hot day when the windmill refuses to work rather than expend a moderate amount of elbow grease in working the pump handle for their relief. This kind of chap is usually of the husky yet lazy type that is there with both feet when it comes to mealtime and makes a big fuss if there isn't an abundance of stuff to eat and drink.

Where there are no trees in the pasture which will furnish ample shade for the stock during the heated months of the summer some kind of shelter should be provided. If nothing more than a shed made of poles and thatched with straw or old hay. A number of instances were reported during July of last year where a number of cattle died from the heat, being found piled up in a corner or fence to gain the shelter of a little patch of shade.

PEAR BLIGHT.

In portions of California and Oregon plant disease experts of the department of agriculture have for the past two or three years been directing a campaign for the stamping out of the pear blight, which in sections of the former state has ruined tens of thousands of bearing trees. A careful study of the pest coupled with numerous experiments has shown the only effective method of combating the blight to be the cutting out of affected shoots and limbs below the point of infection, the pruning instrument, saw or shears, being sterilized after each cutting by dipping in kerosene. Another means serving to lessen the severity of an attack of blight has been found to lie in the removal of all fruit spurs from the trunk and larger lower limbs, as the spores of the blight are transmitted to such spurs by bees at blossom time. Pear orchards in sections where the blight is prevalent should be inspected frequently and no time lost in cutting out affected limbs should the pest put in an appearance. A delay of a day has often meant the loss of many trees, as the blight works with great rapidity, often passing from twig to trunk in the course of a few hours.

It was not the Delaware peach crop which was ruined this year by the April freezes, an exception to what has seemed to have become a very general rule.

Rubbing a fresh ink spot in sweet milk will remove much of the stain, while a thick paste of starch will extract blood from things that can't be washed, being allowed to dry and scraped off with a knife.

A scarecrow is sometimes effective in keeping marauding crows from the cornfield, but better still are two or three dead crows hung up by the hind legs on poles and placed at conspicuous places in the field. We have tried this plan, and it works like a charm.

With string and sticks as cheap as they are we never could see a good excuse for crooked rows of vegetables and berry bushes in the garden. Such rows are not only unsightly from the house and the road, but they make the work of machine cultivation difficult.

Notwithstanding the thousands of acres of burdock that yearly mature their unsightly crop of seed in vacant lots all over the country, we nevertheless import annually from European countries 125,000 pounds of dried burdock root, those preparing it receiving from 3 to 8 cents per pound for it.

The new canes in the raspberry patch—those which will be bearing fruit next season—should be tipped when they are about three and a half feet high. This will result in a sturdy, well branched bush, to the maturing of which all the plant energy for the rest of the season will be devoted.

That tuberculosis can be transmitted from cattle to hogs has been quite forcefully demonstrated in some experiments which have lately been conducted by the Iowa animal husbandry department. Out of twenty-eight healthy pigs which were kept in a pasture three months to clean up after a car load of cows affected with tuberculosis twenty-two showed unmistakable lesions of the disease when slaughtered a short time after removal from the feed lot.

While it isn't so necessary as in the case of a small plant or shrub, the good sized shade tree will make a more thrifty growth if the soil is spaded and hollowed up a few feet about the roots. We saw this fact nicely proved one day last fall in the case of two white oaks eighteen inches in diameter, one in a cultivated garden patch and the other but a couple of rods distant in a dry, hard packed pasture. The first had thrifty, glossy leaves, with a foot and a half of new growth, while the second had a decidedly faded and drought stricken appearance. It was a forceful object lesson and indicated a fact too often overlooked.

The easiest and most effective pruning work that can be done in an orchard is with the thumb and finger or a small knife during the first year following the setting of the young trees. This should include the snipping off of all sprouts but the five or six which will later make the framework of the tree, and if this elimination work is done early in the growing season the remaining branches will be just so much more vigorous. If one has the time at his disposal this work can be augmented by snipping off the tips of the young branches in August. This will tend to season the wood as well as increase the diameter of the branches.

There may be readers of these notes who have fruit trees in their home gardens or small orchards which, like the lily of olden time, "neither toil nor spin," a condition of barrenness doubtless due to too much kindness and barnyard fertilizers. Under these conditions the production of fruit next season may be helped by pruning such trees rather sharply during the month of July, including the thinning out of branches in the body of the tree and the cutting back of limbs longer than they need to be. The strain will come to produce fruit buds for next season. The same principle that governs the production of fruit from a reduction of the tree's vitality—sometimes brought on by a new accident by which a tree is girdled by cultivator or scratched by the house cat.

CHAPTER X.

THE BATTLE'S ON.

"GENTLE knocked and entered.

"Ah, how is Mr. Gentle," said Haggleton, putting down his hat again, "and what brings him here?"

"I'll come right to the point, Mr.—Mr. Jackson." Gentle glanced around him cautiously. "I want to have it out with you before Philip comes in."

"I expect him later on to report on our bakeshop organization."

"Ah! And you ask what the trouble is! There you have it! We have nothing but bakeshops here, nothing but schemes for making money. I wanted you to study the problems of poverty with Philip"—

"Pardon me. That was not our arrangement. Understand, I am a poor man hustling for a living."

"A poor man! It's a wonder no one has recognized you yet!"

"The newspapers say I am away on my yacht. Nobody knows that I'm down here; nobody is looking for me."

"But Philip knows."

"Philip will be silent."

"That's the trouble, Mr. Haggleton. He's too much interested."

"The use of it is that it will help me to win my son. And he is worth winning. Besides, it has another use—as an object lesson to all you kickers. Look at this room and think what it was."

Haggleton looked significantly around at the evidence of his driving power. His eye stopped at the two windows facing the East river, with their view of Brooklyn bridge.

"By the way," he asked, "what's the matter with joining these two little windows into one large observation window? We shall have the finest view in the city."

"What about the landlord?" asked Gentle.

"The landlord never objects to improvements in the property if the tenant pays for them. We'll pay for that window."

"Philip is demoralized," grumbled Gentle.

"Mr. Gentle, you are just getting acquainted with him. He's my son."

"He is fascinated by the idea that John J. Haggleton is doing this extraordinary thing."

"Just so, Mr. Gentle. And he will be more fascinated when he knows why John J. Haggleton undertook to do it."

"It was a clever move."

"No. It has turned out to be a clever move. I am gaining ground with the boy every day, but that's not why I am doing it. I am sixty years old, Mr. Gentle, and used to my comforts. Do you think I'd stand all this because it was a clever move? No, sir! I stayed down here on account of a few little words that my son fired at me. He looked me straight in the eyes and said, 'You've got to do your own loving yourself.' Heavens! That hit me hard! I'm not getting sentimental. I'm going to fight you for all I'm worth, Mr. Gentle, but when you've played your last card and told my boy the worst you can tell about me, then, anyhow, he's got to know that his father came down here and lived in a tenement"—

He stopped a moment.

"Because his father wanted to do his own loving himself."

"Yet you would influence him to be hard and selfish."

"I want him to be a fine business man."

"And I," rejoined Gentle slowly, "want him to be a fine man."

"H'm! I don't expect my son to be a business man and nothing else. I'm glad to have him study these problems of poverty. All I ask is that you and he be reasonable. Suppose we draw up a plan that will satisfy all of us. I'll put up one million, two millions, five millions, if we can work out some sound scheme of public betterment."

"Five millions?" gasped Gentle.

"Yes, sir, five millions. And I should want the work of carrying out such a scheme, the executive work, to be in your hands."

Gentle reflected. It was a great chance for him, and—what touched him far more—a great chance for the poor. What could he not do with so much money? A sudden thought struck Gentle. Oh, ho, here was the nigger in the wood pile. John J. was John J. still.

"Then Philip would know his father?"

"Of course."

"And his mother? What about her?"

Haggleton was ready for him. He never made a proposition without having prepared it in all details, foreseen all objections. So now he answered readily:

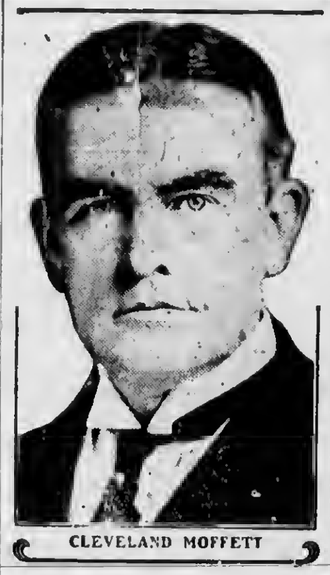
"We will tell Philip that there was trouble years ago between his mother and me. I'll admit that I was much in the wrong—absorbed in business; too keen about money. That ought to fix it."

"Oh, no, not with Philip. It is too vague. He must know exactly what the trouble was."

"Out with it!" exclaimed Haggleton. "You mean that Philip must see that statement."

"I mean that justice must be done to a noble woman."

But Haggleton presented his arguments with restrained vehemence.



CLEVELAND MOFFETT

"You talk about my wife and the wrong I did. I can't atone to her, can I? For she is dead! If I atone to anybody I've got to pay to the living, have I not? After all, that was what his mother wanted—to have Philip do good with my money. Now he'll do more good than she ever dreamed of. I'll put aside—what did I say? Five millions? I'll put aside ten millions for a great battle against poverty!"

"Ten millions!"

"Ten millions, but not one dollar unless I get my son."

"There still remains your wife's statement," said Gentle.

"You are bound by your promise to see her wish carried out, are you not?" urged Haggleton. "Now, if it is accomplished without the statement"—

"See! You think that I ought to destroy it?"

"Don't you?"

Haggleton followed up the advantage already won.

"You have considered yourself and my dead wife in the matter," he pointed out. "But what about Philip? Suppose he preferred not to see this statement—suppose he hesitated? You would advise against it, would you not?"

"In the circumstances I—I think I would."

Haggleton beni, held out his hand.

"Then we'll leave it to him," he concluded, "but not until I say the word."

Gentle nodded assent. The practical man of affairs had shown him how to carry out the dead woman's wishes without unnecessary harm to the living.

Philip entered.

"Well, did you succeed?" asked Haggleton, watching Gentle out of the corner of his eye.

"Indeed I did," exulted the young man. "I got the kneading machine on credit—with a hundred dollars paid down."

"And how about the flour?"

"The Wisconsin mills will furnish it in the combination at 15 per cent off the jobbers' price."

"They will accept thirty day notes from the different bakers?"

"Exactly. No trouble about it at all."

Haggleton turned to Gentle.

"You see," he pointed out, "we shall save on wages and material. We'll do a bigger business because we'll sell better bread—and cheaper bread." Then he turned to Philip again. "How many bakers have come into the combination?" he asked.

"Six so far, but we can get more."

"Get more?" echoed the millionaire. "Why, within ten days all the little bakers on the east side will be tumbling over themselves to get in."

"They've got to come in," began Philip grimly, "or"—

"Or what?"

It was Gentle who spoke, and there was a world of meaning in his voice. This was Philip, the friend of the poor. Indeed, the boy had drifted far away from his teachings in these few days under Haggleton's influence.

Philip looked at him; then his eyes wavered. He saw the accusation in his old friend's face.

"They've got to come in, or go out of business."

"Philip," said Gentle quietly and very gravely—"Philip, my boy, do you realize that you are building up a little trust? That you will turn men out of work?"

The young man looked uneasy.

"A few men will be thrown out of work. But we'll give better bread and cheaper bread to the whole east side."

"Just so," declared Haggleton. And he added, "Incidentally I will prove that a poor man like Moran can conquer these tenement house conditions if he has any assumption."

Haggleton went on.

"We'd better take that empty flat across the hall for sleeping rooms. We shall need this one for offices."

"In a little while," he asserted, "you'll see Joe Caffrey at work in a clean shirt, with pool rooms cut out, and Moran will stop kicking."

"I doubt that, Mr. Haggleton," said Gentle dryly.

"As long as a man has no money he's a kicker about the wrongs of the poor, Mr. Gentle. Give him some, and he stops kicking. That's why Socialists are poor."

"Some Socialists are rich."

"Oh, yes," answered Haggleton, "parlor Socialists, but they never earned the money themselves."

Philip came to the assistance of his old friend.

"Still," he said, turning to Haggleton, "the main point is that things in this country are not fair between the rich and the poor."

Haggleton faced Philip and Gentle. He felt the time had come for a decisive statement.

Novelized by the Author From His Great Play of the Same Name

"Look here," he began sternly; "you can't expect one class to fight the battles of another class. Why should they? Do you fight our battles? If you want us to run our railroads and mines and factories in a certain way, it's up to you to make us do it. You've got votes; we've got money and organization. It's a fight, class against class. You—want to get rid of your grievances; we want to keep our privileges. Go ahead—make laws, inspect our books, learn our secrets, put us in jail, do anything. But if you can't do anything, keep still, take your medicine and don't come whining to us to play your game. We will never do it—never! We are too busy playing our own."

Moran stormed into the room. He was hot, dishevele'd; his eyes glittered.

"Here, you Jackson!" he shouted. "Do you think that you can grab the whole bakeshop business and throw hundreds of men out of work? My boss has joined your combination, and I've got notice to quit! It's an outrage!"

He turned upon Haggleton.

"Hold on!" commanded Philip.

Moran restrained himself.

"See here, Moran," the millionaire began, "this combination is a good thing."

"It's a damned monopoly"—

The baker's assistant started on another speech full of abuse.

"You watch 'em," said Haggleton, dryly to Gentle. "Now listen."

"Look here, Moran; we'll make better bread and cheaper bread for the whole east side."

Moran continued his harangue.

"Yes, and you'll ruin homes in every street."

Better and better, thought Haggleton. The man was working himself up to a climax of denunciatory fury. The anticlimax he had already prepared would be all the more telling.

"Here, you, Jackson!" he shouted.

"We will make a lot of money," he said.

"Blood money!" shrieked Moran. "Any man who would touch a penny of it is a low hound!"

"I am sorry you feel that way," Haggleton's voice sounded disappointed. "I had picked you out as assistant manager."

Gentle became very attentive.

"Assistant manager!" exclaimed Moran.

"With a salary of $18 a week to begin with."

"Eighteen to begin!" Moran was staggered.

"But of course," the millionaire went on regretfully, "I can't ask you now to take it, knowing the way you feel. You would regard it as blood money."

"Yes—of course," Moran stammered, "that is to say—perhaps—come to think of it, I don't know as I would"—

"But consider you would always be thinking of those mothers and children."

"Well, cheaper bread would be a blessing, and as assistant manager I could make things easier for them. I accept."

"Very well, then. Go down to the Madison street bakery and help set up the electric kneading machine."

Moran turned with alacrity, touched his hat and went out.

"You see," commenced Haggleton, "it's as easy as that."

He was grimly amused.

Gentle did not answer. It occurred to him that perhaps he might teach Haggleton an object lesson in his turn and regain his influence over Philip. So he said:

"I forgot those tenement house calls, my boy." Turning to Haggleton, he added, "Perhaps you would like to go with us?" But the millionaire replied with barely concealed impatience:

"There is no use in these tenement calls."

"Oh, yes, there is," protested Gentle.

Quietly Haggleton had continued his investigations of this tenement house problem himself and achieved a great deal. Much of the misery he had seen was preventable by the sufferers themselves. Already he had begun to formulate plans which he would lay before these two reformers. His offer of ten millions for the cause to Gentle had not been made on the spur of the moment. Still, considering it wise not to leave Philip just then to the unopposed influence of Gentle, he accompanied them upon their mission.

CHAPTER XI.

THE WOMAN WHO TEMPTED HIM.

JENNY, who had been hidden in her little room during this long interview, waiting, watchful for an opportunity to see Philip alone, now entered the larger apartment swiftly and darted to the window.

Where were they going? She looked out of the window. Would Joe carry out his promise? She had paid him for his service.

She saw a boy run out of a doorway, speak to Philip and give him a note.

She was all prepared for him. She had taken off her dress and put on a soft wrapper of yellow and black, with her daintiest, flimsiest things underneath and just a touch of perfume. She had let down her thick hair and left it hanging over her shoulders. Then she had opened a bottle of gold dust dust and carefully applied little dabs of it to her arms and shoulders, where it remained in shining blotches.

Poor Jenny! She built such high hopes upon this primitive ruse of hers, this trap of her physical attractions laid for the man whom she worshiped and would have served so loyally and with a devotion that asked so little in return. This was what life had taught her. The dregs through which

The Farmer and His Bank Account

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need of a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year he may pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money.

CHASE S. OSBORN gave one of his characteristic addresses when a few days ago he spoke at a meeting of U of Michigan students for the purpose of organizing an Osborn club. He said:

I want to thank all of you for the interest you have shown in my candidacy. You as well as all men interested in the welfare of the state of Michigan, appreciate a man for what he stands for, and I take it that your interest in me, as well as the interest shown by voters all over the state, is largely due to what I stand for. It is a great compliment to me that you students can pause long enough to demonstrate an idterest in the light I am making for the better conditions and better government in this state. I have either been fooled by a lot of people or else there is a great movement in this state for better conditions in the government of Michigan. I find evidence of it wherever I go, and it is certainly a source of gratification to me that you stand for much the same that the good citizenship all over the state is standing for. You are not satisfied with the way our state affairs have been managed and are eager for a change."

"Politics in this state has got into inferior hands, and if we want good government, if we desire to have the state affairs managed properly and well, we must get out ourselves and take an interest in politics. Each epoch brings new problems to be solved, and if we leave the solving of these problems to inferior people we must expect inferior results. Today we find Michigan, an empire occupying 59,000 square miles with eighty-three counties, unable to pay expenses, really a deadbeat with an empty treasury. There is no excuse for such a condition of affairs. On every side we find a condition of prosperity. People pay their taxes willingly and pay an amount sufficiently large to meet the legitimate expenses, but our state treasury is empty, and the state is discredited in every direction. It seems to me as a citizen and a republican that the republican party must go squarely before the people of this state and say: 'We've been neglectful and we have allowed unfit men to control our party, and they have brought about this unfortunate condition of affairs.' I believe that if we tell them this, and promise to clean up and do better in the future, the people can and will trust the party once more."

"This is the age of new political methods and conditions. In the old days to be a politician meant to be a more or less opprobrious thing. The methods of politicians of the future must be the methods of daylight. I believe that when we make promises in the platform of the party we must keep them. The primary laws of this state give every man a chance to voice his sentiment regarding the selection of proper men to fill the offices, but every man must do his duty by going to the polls and I believe that there is a disposition generally in this state for voters to take an interest in the selection of candidates."

IN this issue we print a short biographical sketch of Lieutenant-governor Kelley, one of the three candidates for the republican nomination for governor. We have already printed one of Mr. Osborn and will, next week, print one of Mr. Musselman, so our readers may be fully informed who the candidates are and what they have accomplished in life that they should ask the votes of the members of the Republican party next September.

TOWNSEND OPENS CAMPAIGN

propriations with which to do more things and employ more men. The present administration is aroused to the fact that great economy can be made in administering the affairs of the government and much has been done in what will prove to be a great reform in the conduct of national affairs."

"This work should been encouraged, even though it incur the displeasure of those who are seeking to profit at the expense of the public. The term 'federal push' is not without significance. It ought not to be necessary to so refer to public officers in order to know what is meant.

"I believe that it is in line with good business to establish a local parcels post. For years a great many people have been demanding what is known as a parcels post system. I also am in favor of the recommendation by the president relative to the establishment of a tariff commission. I am a protectionist. I believe in a protective tariff, a tariff which shall measure the difference in the cost of production in the United States and the cost of production of a given commodity in foreign countries. I believe in the protection of the American workingman, the American laborer.

"I shall favor any measure which, within reason, enlarges the pension benefits to our civil war veterans.

RAISING OF WARSHIP MAINE

Noted Diver Claims It Will Be a Stupendous Job.

LIES IN A MASS OF STICKY MUD

Captain Sorcho, Who Recovered One Hundred and Thirty-two Bodies From the Warship Sunken Many Feet In Havana Harbor, Tells of the Difficulties to Be Overcome.

"They may be able to raise the Maine, but it's going to be a darn tough job," said Captain Louis Sorcho, the great deep sea diver, who was one of the eight chosen by the United States government to go down in the wreck of that ill fated man-of-war immediately after it was blown up in Havana harbor on Feb. 15, 1898.

"Havana harbor has no cleansing tide, merely a rise and fall. It is like a huge basin, with a big niche on the side of the run, through which the water comes in and runs out. Now, the bottom of the harbor, because of this, is a mass of mud, and as the refuse and dirt of the city are emptied here to a great extent and there is no current to carry the filth away the stuff settles at the bottom. To judge how bad the condition of the bottom of Havana harbor is I call attention to the fact that ships are not allowed to anchor there, buoys being provided, for if a boat were to drop its mud hook when it was pulled up it would stir up such a muss that probably the way would be paved for an epidemic.

"Just as soon as we were dressed in our divers' suits and had made sure of our air pumps we went over the side and down into the blackest water I have ever worked in during all the years I have been a diver.

In Mud to His Shoulders.

"The depth where the Maine lies is thirty-one feet and the pressure of water to the square inch about twelve pounds. As soon as I reached the bottom I was up to the shoulders in that awful sticky mud. It was impossible to see anything in that water. Everything depended on the diver's sense of touch. Although we were equipped with the submarine lights, they were useless, and we abandoned these after the first trip down. Our first duty was to get the bodies, and most of these were in the berth deck, forward. It was an awful task. I believe I recovered 132.

"I will not attempt to say whether the explosion was from the inside or outside, but I do know that everything was pointing upward as if the force was from directly underneath. It must have been terrible, for things were blown all out of shape.

"We worked in the Maine nineteen days, and during that time we noticed that she sank several feet deeper in the mud. So you can imagine how much she has settled by this time. It has been estimated that the vessel rests in eighteen feet of mud, and it is going to be a job to lift the Maine out of it.

Five Ways to Raise Ship.

"There are five ways which can be employed to raise the warship. The first is with steel pontoons and chains, but how are they going to pass the chains under the bottom? You can't tunnel through mud as you can through sand. If they should succeed in fastening the chains to the sides and then harness on the steel pontoons the lifting will be unequal.

"Another way would be with air bags. One of the faults in this system is the absence of a valve to regulate the air pressure to equalize it with that of the water.

Cofferdam Method.

"Another method is that of cofferdams. Either the dams are built inside the ship, the holes patched and the water pumped out or else they are built all around the vessel and the pumps set to work. As it seems impossible to get at the hole in the Maine, the second method would be the one used, and I don't see how it can be done. First you must get a firm bottom to hold it on, and the raisers would have to drive the whole of that dam through that eighteen feet or more of mud and then not be certain as to what they would find underneath. The pressure at the depth to which the Maine lies is nearly twelve pounds to the square inch, and so each square foot of the dam when the water was pumped out from inside it would be subject to a pressure of about 1,728 pounds. Unless it was well braced it could not withstand it, and there is apparently no way that braces can be placed so as to hold it.

"But let us suppose that this way is attempted and the water pumped out, who could live down there among that disease bred filth?

"Let us return to the system of closing the vessel up from the inside. There is one way of removing sand, etc., from a ship, and that is by centrifugal pumps, but in this case they would be practically useless for as fast as they sucked out the mud it would pour into the hole. [illegible] because of the fact that there [illegible] mud there the mud would [illegible] the bottom of the [illegible] to back against the [illegible] which is left.

Thursday night the Edward Russel Stock company opened for the season at the opera house in "The Bacheior" and the Maid. Every member of the company made a success of their different roles. While the entire company is claimed by Charlevoix—this being their headquarters—Charlevoix's own, Miss Nanita Mayne, fulfilled the expectations of her many friends in her first, professional appearance at home. The company are now away on a short trip but will be gladly welcomed home again in a short time.

Monday evening the Majestic patrons were greeted by the high class musical comedy team of Oliver and Oliver. The lady has the sweetest voice ever heard here and together with her clever piano playing and Mr. Oliver's musical ability on various instruments, formed the best act the Majestic has had this season. Neighborhood Notes

Holly's latest enterprise is a free bus for the Bush lake resort two, miles north of that town, where Joe Allen, the famous, has entrenched himself and is dishing out the amber fluid to the Oakland county thirsties. Joe has all the modern conveniences and has installed a hack line to and from the lake, meeting all trains at the junction. From the description a Fenton youth gives the place after he had "come to" next day, Joe has a resort that would drive a lumber Jack hilarious with joy. Joe has erected a high board fence covering about one acre, giving the boys lots of staggering ground with comparative safety until they sober up sufficiently to get home safely without getting run over by the cars. The opening night was characterized, it is said, by much noise, the hack line being inadequate to care for the transients.—Fenton Courier.

The action of a county treasurer in failing to notify the board of supervisors that back taxes had been assessed against property which had been sent back for reassessment from the auditor general's office does not invalidate the tax.

So says the supreme court in a decision handed down in the case of Samuel J. Rutter of Lansing. It appears that lands were noted for taxes and referred to the auditor general who for some reason sent them back. The treasurer accordingly noted the lands for taxation again and the supervisors reassessed them. Taxes were again unpaid, the owner interfered claiming that the taxes were not reassessed with the taxes of the current year in which the taxes were rejected.

The contestant also showed that he purchased the lands without knowing that back taxes were unpaid and at the time he bought there was no record in the auditor general's office of a tax levy. The court holds that the treasurer erred, but that this does not exempt the landowner.

Secretary A. C. Carton of the state public domain commission, says it is the intention to have in operation a force of twenty five mounted policemen who will endeavor to prevent the spread of forest fires on state reserves this summer. The state forest reserves, which are located principally in Roscommon and Crawford counties, contain 275,000 acres of standing timber. In Roscommon a cement block house will be erected to be occupied by the state forester and from this point he will direct the movements of the mounted patrolmen.

It is planned to erect stations at various points on the reserve, which will be equipped with lookout towers rising to a height of thirty-five feet above the trees, so that a watchman can readily detect any fire which might originate in his particular territory. These stations will be equipped with telephones so that in the event of a large fire an alarm may be sounded and the entire force be called to the scene.

WOULD MAKE WIVES COOK.

Restriction on Marriages Suggested by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley.

"Before a girl marries I wish that she might have to pass an examination, an examination in domestic science and household economy—in the art of running the home—before she could get her marriage license."

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley of the bureau of chemistry in Washington so expressed himself before a packed audience of women who attended the biennial meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs at Cincinnati the other morning, and his hearers made the big building resound with their applause.

"Do we," said the speaker, "send a man to the United States senate before he has had training and experience in managing the affairs of state? Do we elect a man to the presidency before he has had training in managing a bank? Do we send young women out to preside over an institution more important and more in need of skilled management? To the last question we can, alas, only answer, 'We do.'

"One thing we need in the United States is happiness, and cooking is a more important factor in happiness than the fine arts, for on it depends the nutritive value of foods. And I wish that when you clubwomen have settled all the big affairs of state you would direct your energies to perfecting this art.

"Make your kitchens the attractive places of the homes. Fill up your hangings and your works of art out there. Make them the place de resistance of your homes, and when guests come take them into the wholesome, beautiful, sanitary and artistic kitchen, with the roast beef, the fresh chickens and the green vegetables interspersed among the hangings and the table coverings, instead of conducting these guests into the drawing room, which hasn't been aired for a week."

MRS. HOWE'S NEW PORTRAIT.

Painted by Venerable Author's Son-in-law John Elliott.

When seen recently at her home in Boston, Julia Ward Howe, on the threshold of her ninety-second year, the "grand old woman," famous as the author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and many books and essays, talked about herself and a portrait of her by her son-in-law, John Elliott.

"This likeness is as I want to be known to my many friends, when I have not been able to see for some time," she said, "and I want it to be considered official."

An interesting incident of the venerable author's life is the hanging of her picture in the New Art Museum in Boston by her daughter, Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, wife of John Elliott, the artist, brought this comment from Mrs. Elliott, who said:

"It is not the picture of Julia Ward Howe, the public woman, but a likeness of my mother. The work was done in the morning. Just after we had breakfasted and were in the library."

"Taps."

[Tribute to America's civil war veterans.]

They are marching up the golden steep—
A halting step and slow.
And many in those ranks of gray
Have hair as white as snow.
Their youth lies on the battlefields
Of forty years ago.

The faded tattered flags they bear,
All torn by shot and shell,
Are sacred emblems of the dead
Who loved their country well
How great their love and sacrifice
No human tongue may tell

Those serried ranks are thinning fast
That once with martial tread
The knapsack and the musket bore
Where Grant and Sherman led.
Their sleep is sound and peaceful
In the bivouac of the dead.

No more the reveille at dawn
Shall rouse them from their sleep;
No more shall wives and sisters mourn;
No more shall mothers weep.
Their names mark the roll of time
Time's hand has graven deep

And some lie on those hard fought fields
Where now the blue and gray
Clasp hands across the battle lines
Their blood has wash'd away
Where once the tide of battle flowed
Their children's children play

The passing years speed swiftly,
And silence round them grows,
And to their listening ears there comes
No sweeter song, perhaps,
Than when the battered bugle sounds
Again the old call—"Taps"

Tha Passing of King Edward VII.

Long time a prince, brief time a king,
From first to last a man,
He found this life a goodly thing
In his allotted span
God rest His soul

By standards of the world not great,
Yet through his land and time
He showed how well a king can walk
And fill a second place.
God rest his soul.

Not fashioned for bold deeds of strife
And too humane for war,
He seemed in his full joy of life
A royal troubadour
God rest his soul.

He lived. Maybap his living proved
That kings are not divine,
He knew the joy of being loved,
But erred not with a sign
God rest his soul.

He died. Could other kings have done
His royal reign was brief
But few live more years who have won
Such meed of honest grief
God rest his soul

she had waded clung to her. She believed that through them she could attain her high purpose, for her love for Philip was high and true, compact of the noblest aspirations, the best of all of her.

She would not stoop to the base use of her knowledge of Margaret's relationship. Mr. Jackson had saved her from that baseness, but all was fair in love, and she was beautiful. That weapon, given her, she would employ.

Presently the door opened. "Who's there?" she called.

"It's I," replied Philip. "Hello! Are you here?"

"Yes," confusedly. "I—er—I was fixing up the room. I did not expect you."

The girl came forward, walking rather unsteadily. "I don't feel well," she said. "It is a sort of dizziness." She put her hand to her eyes.

"You're weak and faint," exclaimed Philip. "You must sit down."

Jenny sat down obediently.

"Has Joe Caffrey been here?" asked Philip.

"No."

"He wants to see me."

Jenny sighed faintly.

"Want a blanket around you?"

"No; I'm too hot already. Maybe I have fever." She held out her hand.

"Your hand is warm," said Philip, "but it seems all right to me."

He drew up a chair and sat down at her side.

"I'm so unhappy, Phil," murmured Jenny. "What can I do? Tell me, Phil. You're the only one I can turn to, and—oh, it's awfully hard!"

"I know, Jenny, but"—

"I've tried to do right, haven't I? I've taken any old kind of work, and, God knows, $5 a week isn't much for a girl who's lived as I have. Why, $5 a day wouldn't pay for the flowers I used to get! Haven't I come down and lived and worked in this rotten place and never kicked?"

"Indeed you have, Jenny. You've been fine," said Philip earnestly.

"Sometimes I ask myself what's the use of being decent. Who cares?"

"We all care."

Jenny smiled wistfully. "Do you care, Phil? I did it all for you."

"You did it because it was right, Jenny," he said gravely, but he felt vaguely uncomfortable under her pleading eyes.

"Phil," she went on, "you don't know how hard my work is. This gold dust stuff seems to eat right into me, and I can't get it off. See here," and she showed him the marks.

He gazed at the gilt marks on her neck and spoke sympathetically to her.

Jenny interrupted him.

"Phil, do you ever think of the old days, before I was married? You said I was pretty."

"You were pretty," he answered unsteadily, "and—and you are pretty."

How his pulses throbbed!

"Yes?" she brightened. "And, Phil, you kissed me once. I remember what you said."

"What did I say?" he faltered.

"You said my lips were the sweetest things you ever tasted."

He rose in agitation.

"I must go, Jenny," he said. "I—I can't wait."

"Not yet, Phil," she begged, and awfully changing the ground of her attack, she spoke of her life with such humble sadness that Philip, touched and reassured, sat down again. It seemed, she said, as if an evil star hung over her. Why should George have been killed? If he had been spared her everything would have been different. And if they hadn't taken away her little baby and let it die then still she would have had something to live for. Her voice broke as she spoke of her baby. And if that selfish woman hadn't left her husband alone then, perhaps even then, she would have kept straight. But things had been too hard for her. She hadn't had a fair chance, and—

She turned to Philip with her whole soul in her eyes. "Tell me, Phil, do you think me a wicked girl?"

"No, Jenny, I—I don't."

"Oh, thank you!" she cried.

"Sit closer to me—here. People get lonely, don't they, Phil?"

Her eyes were burning on him.

"Yes-es."

"And want to be loved, don't they?"

"I—I suppose so."

"And—sometimes petted?"

He could not speak; he could only look at her, at her swimming eyes and her red, half parted lips. She trembled with the love that scars and sears, but will have its way. For a moment she met his eyes and then with swift passion caught him in her arms.

"I love you!" she cried passionately. "Oh, how I love you!"

She kissed him full on the lips again and again, and he returned her kisses.

Then at this moment of peril—then suddenly some power in him cleared his brain, and in a flash of sober vision he saw Margaret, his Margaret, looking at him with grave reproof. With sudden revulsion he broke away from her, crying:

"What a dog I am!"

Jenny disillusioned, humiliated, rose quickly and stood looking at him. A bottle on the table caught his attention. It was the little flask of liquid gold. The truth suddenly flashed upon him. She had been playing a part; she had tricked him here to—to destroy him.

"You little devil!" he cried.

"Phil!" she cried in fear.

"Let me see those stains," he ordered, and he tore her wrapper open, exposing her neck. He rubbed his fingers over the stains.

"Ah, I thought so! You said it wouldn't come off. It comes off quite easily. You were lying to me."

"No," she said weakly.

He opened the bottle.

"I say you were lying. It's the same stuff. You brought it here; you put it on your shoulders; you—you"—

"I didn't mean any harm."

"No harm!" he shouted. "Heavens! What do you call harm? Because you hate the girl I love you get me here by tricks and lies. Joe Caffery never sent that note!"

"He wrote it, Phil."

"You made him write it. If he wanted to see me he'd be here. You wanted to get me here—alone."

He paused.

"Do you—do you own up?"

"Yes," she said faintly.

"Phil, I—I did it because"—

"You're bad all through."

Jenny shrank in despair.

"I am bad all through?" she said quietly. "All right. I got you here by a trick? That's true. And I hate the girl you love? You bet I do!

"But what are you?" she flamed. "You are a loyal lover; you are a preacher of reform, Philip Ames, but you held me in your arms, and you kissed my mouth!"

She paused, then added:

"And you liked it! You liked it!"

She showed the scorn of the woman for the man who is weak and places the blame on her.

Philip sank into a chair, crushed, burying his face in his hands. How could he ever face Margaret again?

Jenny forgot herself, her defeat, in the desire to console the beloved one. It was a sister's feeling, pure, compassionate, unselfish.

She knelt beside him and compassionately whispered his name.

He rose with hatred in his voice:

"Don't speak to me."

The tone drove her to a desperate determination.

"Do you mean that?" she asked.

"Yes, I mean it."

Philip's voice was that of the man who echoes the weak plea of the first man: The woman tempted me.

"Then it's all off," Jenny said briskly. Her mind was made up.

She went to her room and returned with hat and cloak.

"I am going. I won't trouble you any more. Goodby."

Philip did not grasp the horrible meaning of her words.

Jenny still had a lingering hope. But Philip neither moved nor spoke. So she said her final farewell, pleadingly:

"I am sorry, Phil—but I—I loved you, and when a girl as bad as I am loves a man—it is"—

The door closed behind her.

Haggleton found Philip in the room an hour later.

"I have had an unpleasant experience," said the son.

"With Jenny Mornn?"

"Yes; it was Jenny. I tried to help her."

Haggleton brushed some face powder off Philip's sleeve. Philip blushed.

"I see," he said, then resolutely, "She's in love with you?"

"Love!" answered Philip, with loathing.

"H'm!" mused Haggleton, brushing some more face powder off the tapel of Philip's coat. "Next time I would advise you to help some older and homelier female."

Don't speak to me.

Haggleton proceeded to give the young man a little lesson in practical worldly wisdom.

"Nothing has happened, has there?" he asked.

"I took her in my arms. I kissed her."

"It is a little thing."

"Little?" Philip's voice grew bitter. "If I cannot control myself in little things, how can I control myself in big things? I am engaged to a fine, pure girl. I must tell her, and she will despise me."

Haggleton slowly walked up and down with him.

"Why tell her?" he asked. "She has a right to know anything serious, but this isn't serious. You love her, don't you?"

"Love her? I worship her! Oh!"

"You don't care for this other woman?" persisted Haggleton.

"No! Indeed not!"

"Then you are easy with your conscience. It would be cowardly to tell her. You would simply transfer the regret from your shoulders to hers. It would cause her needless pain. Repentance is best done in silence when open confession means suffering to others."

"By George, you are right!" exclaimed Philip. "I must not tell her."

He added:

"It's wonderful how you see the best thing to do. I don't know why I speak of it, but I—I feel a sympathy for you, sir. I used to think you were—sort of inhuman, but you've been kind to me, and—you have taught me a lot. Sometimes," Philip went on, puzzling, "I have thought that I have two natures, one from my mother, the other"—his face darkened—"from my father."

"What about your father?"

"My father was not a good man, Mr. Haggleton. He—he pretty well broke my mother's heart."

"How do you know that he was cruel to her?"

"I know how she suffered."

"But she never said what your father did?"

"I never asked. I just grew up with the idea that my life was set apart for a special work. I have a trade for my living, but my real work is to help the poor. But sometimes I feel another thing urging me—a hateful, infernal thing, urging me toward money and—and all that."

Philip's voice was anxious:

"That is why this Jenny affair is so serious. It shows the weakness in me."

Haggleton, seeing his opportunity to strengthen the ultimate position in which the last, the decisive struggle must be fought, grasped it with determination.

"We are all weak, my boy," he said (and how sweet it was to say those two words, "my boy"!). "I will show you how weak I am. It isn't entirely to study the problem of poverty that I am down here."

"No?" Philip looked interested.

"Years ago I did something that I—regret—something wrong. And—Gentle knows it."

"Gentle!"

"Yes. I am making amends for that wrong now."

Haggleton stopped, getting ready for his final argument.

"You will not try to find out what it is that I did in the past?"

"I certainly won't. It is not for me to judge another man."

"And if Gentle should try to tell you?"

"I won't let him tell me."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE HAGUE'S GREATEST CASE

American-Canadian Fishing Dispute to Be Arbitrated by Peace Tribunal.

An array of counsel greater in number and more illustrious in reputation than ever before assembled at The Hague to engage in the trial of a special case has been retained to represent America and Great Britain in the determination of what is undoubtedly the most important issue ever presented to the great peace tribunal.

Technically this is the determination of differences over the fishing rights of Americans and Canadians in their respective waters. The issue of greatest import is the determination of the right of a colony or province, such as Canada or Newfoundland, by local legislature to deprive persons of rights conferred by treaty between the principals. The arbitration tribunal is to meet at The Hague June 1 to hear the oral arguments.

The Newfoundland fisheries controversy between the American and British governments is of long standing, and, prolonged negotiations having failed to result in a settlement, it was agreed last spring to submit the dispute to The Hague tribunal. Ambassador Bryce and Elihu Root, then secretary of state, brought about this disposition of the matter.

The New England fisheries are responsible for the dispute. They protested that the treaty rights of American crews that fish in Newfoundland waters had been questioned, their work interfered with and an attempt made to enforce against them local laws and regulations inconsistent with the privileges guaranteed them by international agreement.

The arbitration court will consist of Dr. Heinrich Lammasch of Austria, umpire, who will act as president; Luis M. Drago, Argentine Republic; Jonkheer A. F. DeSavornin Lohman of the Netherlands, Judge George Gray of Delaware and Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, chief justice of the supreme court of Canada. The agent of the United States is Chandler P. Anderson. The United States counsel are Senator Elihu Root, George Turner and Samuel J. Elder, and the associate counsel are James Brown Scott, solicitor for the department of state; Charles B. Warren and Robert Lansing.

"Albion, the Gem of the Ocean," was written and composed by Jesse Hammond, an English government clerk of ficial, about 1820 and was heard above all others in the theaters, music halls and on London streets. It is apparent that "gem of the ocean" fits an island more aptly than our large tract of continent, and "borne by the red and the blue" (the red of the British army and blue of the navy) is more logical than the meaningless line "borne by the red, white and blue." The lines of the English songs are almost word for word identical with our version, "The Red, White and Blue."—Exchange.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The declared objects of the W. C. T. U. as recently set forth in the "Union Signal," will undoubtedly interest the readers of this department, and are as follows:

The national W. C. T. U. carries on forty departments of work all tending to girdle the monster tree of the liquor traffic and the tree that is girdled dies. The society is organized in ever state and territory in this country and in fifty other nations.

It has secured the enactment of temperance education laws for the public schools of every state and territory. It has been the chief factor in state campaigns for statutory prohibition, constitutional amendments, reform laws in general and those for the protection of women and children in particular, and in securing anti-gambling and anti-cigarette laws.

The crusade of the medical temperance department against concealed alcohol in proprietary and patent medicines, resulted in agitation for legislation requiring the publication of the ingredients used and awakened the church and secular press to the danger lurking in medicines.

It aided in obtaining an appropriation of $9000 from the legislature of Illinois for a statue of Miss Francis Willard, now in Statuary Hall, Washington, D. C., the only woman thus honored.

It first secured the appointment of police matrons, now required in nearly all the large cities of the United States. During the entire session of Congress the W. C. T. U. keeps a superintendent of Legislation at Washington to look after reform bills.

This organization was among the first to ask for an appropriation by the United States Congress for libraries, and better food and care for the soldiers, which appropriation now amounts to about two million dollars.

Organization among colored people is a very encouraging feature of the W. C. T. U. work, also among the Indians in Indian schools. The department of organization among foreign-speaking people prints and circulates literature in twenty different languages and keeps a missionary at the port of New York. It is planning to increase, as rapidly as possible, the number of languages in which literature is printed.

About 120,000 meetings have been held the last year under W. C. T. U. speakers. It is the largest woman's organization in the world and is constantly increasing. The gain during the last year was over eighteen thousand members. The world's convention met at Glasgow, Scotland, June 4-11, 1910. The national convention meets at Baltimore, Md., November 13 to 19, 1910.

CHAPTER XII.

MARGARET AND HAGGLETON.

MARGARET LAWRENCE meanwhile was going her way, doing good.

Philip's letters were full, moreover, of admiring praise of this mysterious Mr. Jackson, whom she had vaguely seen that one morning in the Moran home. His letters still were filled with protestations of love, but they were promises also of idleness, of riches, things that she, in her youthful enthusiasm, scorned. Yes, Philip was changing, and not for the better.

It was with happy anticipation, therefore, that she left the "case" which she had successfully nourished back to health and returned to Mrs. Blaney's boarding house. She would have time now to take her worldly minded lover in hand and to bring him back to the path of loving service to the poor.

On the doorstep of Mrs. Blaney's house she met Gentle, who looked very serious.

"Miss Lawrence," he said rapidly, "will you find Philip at once? There has been an accident in the river. Atkinson, one of the divers, is caught in a wreck, and he is needed. You will find him at the Morans', talking bake-shop to Mr. Jackson, I suppose."

Margaret ran all the way on her mission.

She found Philip in the Morans' rooms in consultation with Mr. Jackson. The elder man considerately turned, giving them an opportunity for a lover-like greeting.

"Philip," she said hastily, "Atkinson has been caught in a wreck. Mr Gentle sends me to tell you to come at once."

Philip was alert at once. He started for the door.

"Phil," shouted Margaret, running after him, "you are not going into danger?"

"Danger? I am going to get Atkinson out of that wreck."

Haggleton and Margaret looked at each other curiously. They had not met yet and had seen each other only once—on the day of the millionaire's arrival at the tenement, when the two child boarders had been taken to the hospital. Haggleton looked at Margaret and approved of her appearance. She looked like a gentlewoman, every inch of her. But what attitude would she take when she came to learn his true name, still more his relationship to Philip?

He stepped forward.

"My name is Jackson, Miss Lawrence. I am Mr. Ames' partner."

Margaret looked at him intently. Then she backed away from him.

"Jackson!" she exclaimed bitterly. "No, your name is Haggleton. You are John J. Haggleton! I know you for what you are!"

Haggleton searched in his memory. A light began to dawn upon his features, which changed from doubt to certainty, to dismay.

"You are the daughter"— he began.

"Yes, I am the daughter of William Lawrence, the man you ruined and dishonored."

"Business made it unavoidable, Miss Lawrence"—

"Business! Yes, business as you practice it."

"Oh, now, that's going too far! I want to explain to you."

Margaret shook her head.

"I won't listen to you," she said, violently agitated.

"You have strong prejudices, Miss Lawrence."

"Yes, against disloyalty and dishonesty."

Haggleton reflected. This complication disarmed him. Was the ghost of his guilty past, which he had made harmless through Philip's promise never to allow Gentle to tell him of it, to be conjured up against him by this young woman? A second later he was again Haggleton, master of circumstances.

"Suppose I admit that I did your father a wrong. Suppose also that I wish to make amends."

"I don't believe it."

"Suppose I tear down this block, 'lung block'—suppose I tear it down and make a fine playground of it in memory of your father—and call it Lawrence park?"

"Lawrence park?" Margaret's eyes shone with enthusiasm.

"Lawrence park where 'lung block' used to stand," she repeated softly to herself. But her grievance welled up suddenly.

"You know how to tempt me," she said bitterly, "but I could never be friends with you."

"If it isn't friends," he said briefly, "then it is enemies."

"Yes, enemies always! I do not trust you, John J. Haggleton. Why are you living in a tenement under an assumed name? You must have some selfish purpose."

"No; my purpose is not selfish."

"Why do you want to make friends with me?" she continued. "Why do you care what I do?"

Again Haggleton changed his tactics. She was bewildered already.

"I'll tell you frankly," he answered, "I do not want you to influence Philip against me."

The effect was what Haggleton had foreseen. Margaret's thoughts turned from her own grievance to a new and nearer preoccupation.

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

"Influence Philip against you!" she wondered. "What do you care for Philip? Influence a poor master diver against John J. Haggleton?"

Her glance strayed to Phil's picture on the wall. Something that she had never seen before in it struck her. She remembered what Gentle had told her concerning the mystery of her lover's parentage.

She turned to Haggleton, scrutinized his features, then sank down in a chair.

"Oh," she cried in horror, "you are Philip's father!"

She was overwhelmed.

"Phil," she said, "whom I love and whom I have promised to marry. You are his father, and you ruined mine! It is horrible!"

Haggleton waited a few moments patiently. It was wiser to let these overwhelming impressions make their effect one by one for a little while in her mind than to hustle them out of it, to return later perhaps with tenfold strength. He still held much in reserve. When he judged that the proper moment had come—Margaret had wiped her eyes several times and finally tucked away her handkerchief—he resumed the interview.

"Philip knows nothing of this."

"I will tell him," she said, rising. "I will warn him."

"Warn?"

"You think that this boy has inherited tendencies which you can appeal to. I'll appeal to Philip's better nature."

"Suppose you fail?"

"I cannot fail. I love him."

Haggleton sat down opposite her.

"Let me tell you something, Miss Lawrence," he said very quietly. "I am telling you because you are a woman—a good woman. But, Miss Lawrence"—he raised his voice skillfully to deepen her attention—"it is astonishing how much harm is done in this world by good women."

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"I will show you what I mean right in my own life. You think it has been all hard and cruel, no love in it at all. Just scheming for money, grabbing everything in sight. But who made me that way? A woman—a splendid, high principled woman like you."

"You mean your wife?"

"Yes, my wife." In a very low voice "My wife," he continued, "did not approve of certain things I did in business, but instead of helping me she left me. She stole away my little boy, my son, and when she took him she took all the love out of my life. Four years old he was when—when she took him away. Such a brave little fellow! He had just had his curls cut off. He used to walk along with me and swing his little cane. Love him! Love him! What plans I made for that boy! What hopes I had for him! And when he got sick—well, never mind, but I love him! He was my son, my only son! You think that I have all I want because I have money. Money! I tell you I want my son, and you want to take him from me. I've got him, and I am going to keep him!"

Haggleton had more to say.

"Do you believe in fair play?" he asked. "Do you know why I did not tell him that I am his father? It is because Gentle said that it wasn't fair to throw my millions in the scale against his ideals."

"Gentle made you promise?"

"Yes. And I did not want to buy a son—I wanted to win his respect and love."

At this moment Gentle entered quietly. Margaret got up. The spell of Haggleton was broken.

"You have aroused Philip's admiration by your conduct of this business," she said with decision. "You can bend every one to your will, but you can't bend mine."

"Gentle," said Haggleton briefly, "I have kept my word. I have not told Philip."

"You knew that he is Philip's father?" asked the girl.

"Yes, Margaret. You believe me to be Philip's friend and yours?"

"Yes, but"—

"Don't tell Philip," repeated the old diver, with increasing seriousness. And he added significantly:

"At least not until I give the word."

"I trust you, Mr. Gentle," she said slowly. "I will not tell Philip."

Then, turning full upon Haggleton, she threw down the gauntlet between them:

"I have promised now, but—the battle is not ended yet."

"The battle!" answered Haggleton. "The battle!" he said again. "I accept your challenge, but you, who love him and whom he loves, remember that he is my son! We are of one flesh, he and I, and that's the elemental fact. You cannot keep us apart!"

He bowed to Margaret and left.

The girl at once turned to Gentle. The momentous interview through which she had just passed was forgotten in her anxiety for her lover.

The old diver could give her good news. He had been ordered not to go out with the tub, but to stay on the dock, and had hurried home the moment the news had been signaled across the water that all was well, to tell Margaret and put an end to her suspense. He had not found her there and had gone to Moran's place to look for her, stopping, however, long enough on the way to telephone for particulars if any were yet to be had. He had received them briefly in the laconic language used by all men who have a calling or a profession in common.

Gentle had heard enough to assure Margaret that Philip had made one of the bravest rescues on record, a deed that would be celebrated for many a day wherever divers met together. Calculating daring, a dangerous risk deliberately planned and carried through to the fraction of a minute, superhuman strength—these were the qualities that stood in the narrative unavoidably tangled up in many technicalities.

And Philip was not hurt? Margaret asked again and again. On being informed that he was safe and sound and hoped to see her that evening she hurried away to prepare for his coming.

Gentle, left alone, looked around the room, so cheery now in its neatness and order, yet it felt unaccountably empty.

"Jenny!" he called, but no answer came.

He put on his hat and slowly went out into the street.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE MASTER DIVER.

PHILIP had hastened to the scene of the accident. As they steamed along on the tug one of the men explained what had happened. A barge loaded with copper ore had been run into by a ferryboat early that morning and sunk in fifty feet of water off Eighteenth street.

Atkinson had gone down to put chains under the barge so they could get her up. Four times he had signaled them to lift, and four times they had tried and failed. He had been down over three hours!

Philip shuddered. "In fifty feet of water!" He knew that two hours at such a depth was a full day's work for the strongest diver with the brain throbbing under an air pressure of many tons.

"Come," he cried as they drew up to an ugly wrecking scow anchored in midstream—"come, get the suit on me quick!" Three of the crew worked swiftly and silently dressing him, for no diver can dress himself.

"Go into the cabin and fetch me my knife," Philip said to one of the men.

Slowly he lifted his heavy feet over the side and, standing on the ladder bent forward on the deck, face down, as a man would lay his neck on the block. The helpers made fast around his waist the hundred pound belt of lead that would presently sink him to the bottom, and under his arms they fixed the life line loose. Then they brought the copper helmet with its three goggle eyes and screwed it fast to the collar, leaving the face glass out for a last word.

"Old comrade, I'm here!"

"Here's your knife," said the helper, holding out a leathern sheath to Philip.

"Look sharp now," he ordered. "And when you get the signal to lift, lift fast. Ready!"

As he spoke two men began turning at a wheezing air pump, while a third screwed on the face glass which cuts off a diver from the outer world.

He sank with a roar in his ears, sank with his total weight of nearly 300 pounds, and presently landed safe on the deck of the sunken barge. He groped along the deck, searching for the hole in the barge's side.

Ah, here it was! No wonder she sank quickly! Side and deck ripped open to her middle. He made out a line of silver bubbles yonder, steadily ascending. Atkinson must be there, down on the bottom.

Philip lowered himself over the side and sank until his iron feet touched the river bed. Then carefully he made his way toward Atkinson and in a moment saw what had happened. There was much soft mud in the river here, and the barge, heavily laden,

The Farmer and His Bank Account

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need of a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year he may pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money.

Now that both senatorial candidates have issued their respective platforms, these may be comparatively considered. Mr. Burrows' announcement might have been written at any time since 1856, when the republican party was founded, so absolutely non committal is it on any popular question of progressive reform.

We gather from his statement that he believes the country ought to be perpetuated, and that the navy should be at least seaworthy. As to the burning questions on tariff revision, postal savings banks, parcels post, conservation, the popular election of United States senators, the rescue of the republican party from the designs of corporation campaign contributors, Mr. Burrows has nothing to say. Although he has been under strong and constant criticism by the people of his state for the subserviency he has shown to the masters of the senate, he neither excuses nor explains himself, nor does he, by word of intimation, give us the slightest reason to expect that, if returned to the senate he will pursue any course other than the one he has followed most of his life. Julius Caesar Burrows' indifference to the opinion of the people of Michigan is sufficient, if no graver reasons existed, to warrant his retirement from public life. His promise of party loyalty is without point; in his case it means, not allegiance to the best interests of the party, but allegiance to whatever powers or interests happen for the time being to have usurped the control of the party for their own ends. Thirty or forty years ago, when the nation was in a quiescent state, so far as political progress was concerned, Senator Burrows' platform might have been vaguely satisfying, but today it is as puerile as the recitation of the alphabet for the solution of pressing problems.

Mr. Townsend's announcement, on the other hand, bears the marks of the times in which he lives. He is not still fighting the civil war or voting for forgotten presidents. He does not plead for a senatorial job. He simply says to the people, "If you send me to the upper house of congress I will stand thus and so on this measure and that. And the measures he discusses are those of today. He does not hide behind vague pledges of "party loyalty," but he defines what he means by that phrase. To Mr. Townsend "party loyalty" does not mean loyalty does not mean loyalty to the buccaneers of politics, who seize parties for raids on government; it means loyalty to certain fixed and and definite republican principles, which remain stable and true in spite of the defections and selfishness of temporary bosses. When republicanism and republican partisanship cease to be synonymous, he remains republican, even though for a time he is compelled to cease to be a partisan. He is insurgent against anything that defiles or dilutes or contradicts the republicanism he has served since boyhood, and he refuses to bow to the infallibility of Vice-President Sherman, or a Joe Cannon, or a Nelson W. Aldrich, and it is a safe assertion that had Charles E. Townsend been in the senate last term the record would not have shown him voting "Yes" only when Mr. Aldrich voted that way, and "No" when Mr. Aldrich saw fit to vote "No," as it shows Julius Caesar Burrows to have done.—Detroit News.

MUZZLE YOUR DOGS

Several Children Have Been Bitten in City

Reports from Ann Arbor are That Dogs Were Mad.

About ten days ago Dwight McGeagh, son of James McGeagh, was bitten by the large dog owned by J. A. Noble and the head of the dog was sent to Ann Arbor, where it was found to be affected with rabies, so well developed that when a guinea pig was inoculated it died within twenty-four hours, and the son of John Curtis had also been bitten by a mad dog. The boys were immediately taken to Ann Arbor for treatment, and at last accounts were doing nicely. Since that time several more cases have happened of children being bitten by dogs, and a real danger faces the people of this city.

When this condition of affairs exist we are prone to ask the reason. Have our city officials neglected their duty? They have not. On the first appearance of any signs of rabies in Charlevoix, Dr. Thirlen, at that time health officer, issued a warning and gave notice that the dogs must be kept muzzled and at home until further notice, and the present council, health board and health officer Dr. Wilkinson posted further warnings. The dog warden has been vigilant. It is plain then that no blame can be placed on our officials, but must be laid at the door of those who have advocated non-compliance with the law and created a sentiment against it, through that love which we all feel for the most faithful of all animals—the dog.

To our mind, however this is a mistaken idea, much as we love dogs we feel more for children and when their lives are endangered it is our duty whether we believe in the methods taken by the officers, or not, to co-operate with them in the performance of the duties entrusted to them, and as good citizens keep our dogs at home and muzzled until the danger is past.

Sharks' Eggs.

The eggs of fishes are usually small, soft and inconspicuous. The most remarkable point about them is the extraordinary number laid by the individual. A single cod lays as many as 9,000,000 eggs. Sharks lay eggs which are large in size, few as to numbers and are deposited singly instead of in masses. These eggs consist of a dark colored leathery envelope and are usually adorned with frills, horns or long twisted tendrils. These appendages serve the purpose of keeping the egg case supported among the branches of seaweeds, thus preserving the embryo from the disaster it would sustain were the egg carried hither and thither by the waves.—Scientific American.

AGING ORIENTAL RUGS.

Doctoring With Chemicals That Destroy the Fiber.

Of the hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of oriental rugs brought into the United States annually many of them are what are known to the profession as "washed rugs," says the Scientific American. This means that brightly colored oriental rugs are sometimes washed with a solution of chloride of lime, a treatment which partly bleaches the colors and imparts a soft appearance to the rug. The chemical treatment is a process of washing which produces the effect of age and a peculiar sheen to the surface, which is pointed out by many dealers as a proof of superior quality. The fact is, however, that the process of washing invariably weakens and in some instances destroys the materials of the rug. The progressive effect of the chemical treatment of the rug is this: The chlorine gas contained in the chloride of lime attracts oxygen and moisture from the air, by which muriatic acid is formed. This eats away the vitals of the fabric. Sooner or later the wool and cotton in the rug become brittle and thus weaken the warp and deteriorate the wool. When this deterioration is complete the pile of the rug may be swept away by the ordinary process of sweeping, and the warp, which is the foundation of the rug, becomes so weak that holes appear here and there, and soon the rug is worthless.

It not seldom happens that a Persian rug is too glaring in some bright hue, perhaps red, and is not salable. An unscrupulous dealer will subject the rug to the series of washings in chemically prepared water. In this way he turns out a rug possessing a soft antique sheen that is really captivating and finds a ready purchaser for the doctored floor covering.

Only those who have sought to keep themselves informed as to the increase of interest in the making of good roads in Michigan, can know of the surprising progress made within the past few years. More than a million dollars have been appropriated by the various counties of the state for use this summer and this amount will be largely added to through private and corporation subscriptions. And what is particularly noteworthy in relation to these appropriations is that almost ninety per cent of the entire total is provided by counties north of the central part of the state.—Cadillac News and Express.

CHICAGO BUSINESS MEN

On Steamer Roosevelt Visited Charlevoix Tuesday Morning.

Tuesday morning, to the bursting of bombs and the music of the calliope, the steamer Theodore Roosevelt, with a party of Chicago business men on board, who were on their annual excursion, pulled into Charlevoix.

Our business men got busy and showed as many as possible our city during their brief stay and Charlevoix residents were shown over the boat, which is a magnificent excursion steamer. The Chicago business men are making the trip of the lakes, stopping at the principal cities, keeping in communication with their home city by the courtesy of the Chicago Telephone Company, while here using the Bell lines.

Mayor Hampton and about a dozen other citizens accepted their invitation and made the trip with them to Traverse City.

Neighborhood Notes

Three men dead, one or two others thought to be dying and several others in a more or less dangerous condition, are the results thus far developed of a drunken debauch which had its beginning and its continuance on the part of its unfortunate victims in several of the "regulated" saloons of Cadillac through several days, and its tragic and miserable endings in some poor buildings in the vicinity of a crossroads store or group of stores about fourteen miles north west of Cadillac. Four gallons of whiskey sold to the then drunk members of the party by a Cadillac dealer in that comodity played a leading part in the dissipation that lead to death, and a socalled "blind-pig" or more than one of such illegitimate liquor selling places, added their assisting services to the deplorable affair. Just a little while ago it was being told to the voters of that city and that county that "regulated saloons" would put an end to "blind-pigs" and the whiskey jug business. But the people of Cadillac and Wexford county now know that the saloons have added a hundred fold to "out side" drinking as they term it, and to the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors. The row of dead men provided through the occurance gives testimony that will not be forgotten and which cannot be hushed up or disposed of.

Politics is a strange game but it has remained for the newly appointed Chief Justice Bird to face the latest in oddities. Briefly he is facing two elections, and very soon. After serving less than a year in his present office, he will have to go through another campaign before he can secure a full term.

In the first place he has been appointed to fill an unexpired term and under the law such appointments hold good only until the next election which is this fall, and before filling out the rest of the term for which Montgomery was elected the people pass upon him. Also Mr. Montgomery's term would have ended this spring which will force Mr. Bird into another election.

The same conditions apply to four circuit judges in the state, Collingwood of Ingham, Judge Kendrick of Saginaw county, Judge Withey of the Osceola circuit and Judge Flannigan of the upper peninsula.

A deed for land was recorded in Register of Deeds MacKenzie's office at Houghton this week, a deed which carries with it more sentimental story than probably any other deed ever recorded. It is the deed of John Watkins of Calumet conveying to the Michigan Audubon society 40 acres of land described as the north half of the north-east quarter of Sec. 31-53-33. It is deeded in consideration of one dollar "and through his love for nature and science." The Michigan Audubon society is an organization formed for the purpose of preserving the wild birds of Michigan. The land is given for the purpose of creating a game and bird preserve and it is stipulated in the deed what kinds of birds and animals may be killed thereon. Mr. Watkins reserves the right to cut such timber as he may choose during a period of 20 years. But if he dies sooner than that the timber right goes to the society. If the society is dissolved at any time the land goes to the state of Michigan and for the same purpose.

While riding on a street car on Ludington street, Escanaba, the little daughter of C. W. Molin of Wells fell from the window and although toppling heavily to the pavement escaped without a single injury. Mr. and Mrs. Molin with the babe were returning to Wells visiting with friends in the city. The babe was standing in the seat at the side of Mrs. Molin when the child suddenly jumped and before the mother could catch her had fallen through the window. The car was moving at a fair rate of speed and the little one landed on the pavement between the adjoining tracks and although she cried lustily when the car was quickly stopped and the parents hastened back it was found that she was not injured in the least.

An Orchid Tragedy.

Perhaps Madagascar has claimed more orchid hunters' lives and been the scene of more revolting acts of cruelty than any other place. Some years ago a German orchid fancier while seeking some specimens in the forests of this island was captured by some of the native officials, who, after covering him with oil, burned him allve. Another collector who was seized by some of the same officials was allowed to choose between being burned allve or himself setting fire to some fagots on which lay another prisoner, also an orchid collector, and thus saving his own life. He chose the latter alternative and died six months later a lunatic.

CONCENTRATION.

The weakest living creature, by concentrating his powers on a single object, can accomplish something. The strongest, by dispensing his over many, may fail to accomplish anything. The drop by continually falling bores its passage through the hardest rock. The hasty torrent rushes over it with hideous uproar and leaves no trace behind.—Carlyle.

Harriman Lines to Help Western Fruit Display

Endeavor Will be Made to back Michigan off the Board at the Coming Chicago Land Show.

The Western Michigan Development bureau has learned that the Harriman lines have decided to use $50,000 in advertising the western country in connection with the big land show to be held in Chicago in November. Some weeks since, information came to the bureau that the fruit growers in the apple regions of the west had announced that they proposed to "back Michigan off the board" as far as fruit displays are concerned at the coming land exposition.

The two above facts taken together, have proven to be a stimulus that is arousing the bureau to its utmost to get the fruit growers of Western Michigan to produce the very best that the soil and climate of the region will admit. It is believed that with the extra efforts being made the present season in the matter of caring for trees and fertilizing of the ground beneath the trees, that fruits will be grown that will surpass anything ever before seen in Michigan.

Last year, it will be remembered that the Western Michigan fruit exhibit at the Chicago Land Show was the best fruit display there by all odds and if determination and perseverence can win, Michigan will again take the honors. So far about 100 fruit growers in the counties comprising Western Michigan have agreed to set aside from one to five trees and give these trees the best possible attention for the purpose of growing superior fruits, especially, apples for display purposes. With such a good start at such an early date in the season, it is doubtful if the Harriman thousands can wrest from Michigan the laurels she now holds.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

RESULT OF EXAMINATIONS

Held This Year for the Eighth Grade

WRITTEN ON BY EVEN TWO HUNDRED

One Hundred Eighteen Received State Diplomas

While Forty Others Were Very Near the Passing Point—Commencement Exercises at Bay Shore.

The eight grade examination for 1910 has left pleasanter memories with the class than the examinations of former years have done.

The general impression seemed to be that the examination was easier than former ones have been but while this may be partially true yet more of the success is due to better teaching and better application on the part of the students than to the fact that the examination was particularly easy.

An even 200 students wrote the examination and of these 118 received state diplomas while about 40 others were very near the passing mark and will be admitted to the high schools if they will make an effort to make up a little work during the summer.

Twelve of the others were seventh graders who wanted to try the examination. None of the seventh graders received diplomas though some of them made fairly good records.

In addition to this 6 students wrote part of the examination as a special test on some work that they were making up and 5 students from other counties had their papers forwarded from this county to other commissioners.

The four students from the Bay Shore school who passed the examination were determined to complete their work in orthodox fashion and it was my pleasure to attend one of the prettiest little commencement exercises in the church there that I have seen anywhere.

The church was handsomely decorated and was filled to its capacity when the exercises opened.

The members of the class, Orlie Hooper, Bessie Tillotson, Wanela Zipp and Ethel Zipp each took part in the program and if their maiden efforts on the platform as speakers can be taken as a guide, there is a bright future in store for the entire quartette.

All present enjoyed the affair and the general interest shown by the patrons speaks well for the schools of Bay Shore.

Twenty-five diplomas were given to the members of the Boyne City 8th grade, 18 to the Charlevoix class and 22 to the East Jordan class, 6 to members of the 8th grade of the Parochial school in Charlevoix and 9 to the students of the schools on the Beaver Islands.

In the rural schools diplomas were given as follows:

Florence Alexander, Bessie Allen, Ole Lyngklip, Oswald Esler, Sertie Howe, Ward Genett, Hattie Hamlin, Esther Hamlin, Geo. Hamlin, Chas. Hascho, Orlie Hooper, Ethel Zipp, Wanela Zipp, Bessie Tillotson, Edward Metz, Ira Olney, James Fraser, Meta Sanford, Leora Sanford, Edith Fineout, Grace Davis, Merle Stoody, Nina Kahler, Earl Bardwell, Elizabeth Doyle, Jennie H. Davis, Mary Huston, Walter Holbrook, Edward Wilde, Leo Holmberg, Donald Graham, Glenn Thomas, Hazel Niles, Isabel Phillips, Lydia Hayden, Lloyd Ballard, Susie Bennett and Elsie Bailey.

I hope that the successful applicants will take advantage of the tuition law and that they will be enrolled in the high schools of the county next year.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

had sunk deep in it. A risky job of tunneling, this—a very risky job!

Ah, there was Atkinson now, half sitting, half lying, against a mud bank! But he did not move! Stepping forward, Philip took the hand in encouraging grasp as if to say, "Old comrade, I'm here!" A faint pressure was returned, but Atkinson lay quite still.

Atkinson's life line ran up free, but his hose, the precious way of air and life, was caught under a shattered timber of the barge, which must have lurched over suddenly as Atkinson tunneled under it. And in turning it had caught the rubber pipe before the old diver could escape, and now the end of the timber, hooked over the hose, was imbedded in the mud and the hose was held in a massive V that pressed down upon it with the whole weight of the barge and its load. He felt Atkinson's hand drawing him closer, and, bending over, he heard this message tapped on his copper helmet in the Morse alphabet: "Wife—children—love."

Heavens! The man was dying!

He forced back the tight rubber wristbands and felt for the pulse. There was a feeble fluttering, a spark of life, still.

What could he do? Surely he must save this man!

Then in a flash he recalled the theory that if a diver in trouble like this were to cut his hose and instantly press his thumb over the opening he might live on the air inside his suit until they could lift him to the surface with the life line and get his helmet off.

He remembered hearing the question argued and doubt expressed whether a diver would be able to cut his own hose, for the diver himself might have trouble in getting at it. But this case was different. He could get at Atkinson's hose well enough.

The master diver drew his knife and, bracing himself firmly with Atkinson's hose held tight between his knees, made ready to cut.

But wait! Where were the life lines? He must be quick with the signals to lift after the thing was done! Ah! There they were swaying beside him, two good ropes reaching up through the yellow water, his own and Atkinson's. Three quick jerks on each, and the boys overhead would do the rest.

As Philip gripped his knife again a feeling of revulsion overcame him. After all, he could not do this thing. That hose was a living thing, life and breath to his comrade. To cut it was to bring Atkinson instantly face to face with horrible death. And perhaps there was some other way.

Perhaps if he waited— Then there came to him the ghastly faces of divers he had seen taken from the suits when there had been too much waiting, of divers who had perished miserably in some such plight as this. No; he must act and not delay. He must take the responsibility as a father takes it sometimes at the bedside of a sick child. This was the right thing, the only thing, and—

With a strong, quick stroke he severed the hose. Then instantly he stopped the hole with his left thumb and gave three quick pulls on the life lines, and the next second the two divers were rising to the surface.

And all might have gone well had not the men who were lifting Philip pulled faster than the other two, so that presently he found himself rising above Atkinson.

Philip seized Atkinson's life line with his right hand and clung to it desperately, while with his left he held the hose. He could just reach down to it and no more. And presently, as the men above worked in madder haste, he felt Atkinson's life line sagging above him and knew by the sudden strain that he was holding the man's entire weight, suit and all, with his maimed right hand.

He could not help with his left hand because he dared not move it from the hose. He could not signal the men even if they would have understood him, for both hands were occupied. And with all the love in the world he could not support this load many seconds. It was beyond his strength—beyond the strength of any man.

Now they must be halfway up. He would hold on a little longer, and then—and then came a great roaring in his ears and blackness in his eyes, and the hose was torn from his nerveless hand. He had failed in his effort. Atkinson must die, and in the agony of this thought he lost consciousness.

* * * * * * * *

The next thing Philip knew he was lying on one of the bunks of the wrecking scow and the company's doctor was bending over him. He opened his eyes weakly.

It all came back to Philip, and he started up in alarm.

"Where's Atkinson?" he cried.

"Here I am, Phil," answered a cheery voice from the bunk opposite, and, looking over, he saw the rugged face of his saved comrade.

"Ah!" sighed the young man and sank back in contentment.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony grange met in regular session last Tuesday evening at the Pleasant Valley school house.

The subject of the "Parcels Post," was discussed by L. D. Wilson, W. C. Burdick and others; the substance of the discussion being that the majority of the people want it, and have the power but lack the knowledge of how to use the power in an effective manner. When we learn to elect representatives from our own ranks instead of representatives of the express companies or other corporations we will get what we want when we want it.

The subject of "The One Magazine that I Like Best and Why," was ably handled by Mrs. Marcia Burdick followed by H. L. Wilson. They could hardly select one best magazine from so many good ones, but it was the general opinion that there were a number of magazines which are doing a great deal of good by pointing out the abuses that should be corrected but the most of them fail to suggest a remedy. There are magazines that suggest a remedy. The remedy should be sought by all.

Several other subjects were briefly discussed. W. C. Burdick gave a humorous recitation.

The next meeting's program will be in charge of Flora, Mrs. J. A. Newville.

FAMOUS BLUE RIBBON RACES

Will Be Held in State Fair Track at Detroit, First week in August.

Never has the general outlook for trotting and pacing been as bright as it is this year. More good horses are in training and there is more enthusiasm among the owners and drivers, so that when the bell rings those who enjoy the sports of the sulky will have a chance to see some exceptional contests.

The season of high class racing lasts three months and while more than a dozen tracks will conduct this kind of sport during that time there will be no meeting so freely talked about as Detroit's famous Blue Ribbon, the leader for more than a quarter of a century. This year the Detroit meeting will be held during the first week in August, from the first to the fifth, this change rendered it possible for the driving club to stage a series of futurity (colt) races that are valued at almost $20,000.

While this innovation is something that will attract breeders from all parts of the country it does not mean that any part of the regular program is being slighted for it. On the contrary, the M. & M. $10,000 trotting stake and the Chamber of Commerce $5,000 pacing stake have the largest and best entry lists in their history and should prove the most interesting renewals of these classics.

There has been much activity at the state fair grounds where the Detroit meetings are held. Trainers have been arriving since early in April and their horses are well advanced. Gus Macey, who won the M. & M. with Spanish Queen, is on hand with another for this year's stake, and a stable of very fast trotters and pacers. W. L. Snow has among his twenty five head the mare Darkey Hal, and Dan McEwen is there with The Eel. Each of the pacers has a record of $2.02\frac{1}{4}$, and they are the fastest by record that will race this year. They never have met in a race but will be factors in the free-for-all pace at the Blue Ribbon meeting, which will be but one of the many good things during the five days.

CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Who is an active candidate for United States senator is a self-made man if there ever was one. He was a farmer boy. His parents were very poor and he had to educate himself. He made good as a school teacher and fitted himself while teaching to practice law. He became a member of one of Jackson's leading law firms and was one of the state's attorneys in the celebrated state tax cases. He has always been active in politics, having been register of deeds of Jackson county five terms. He was a delegate to the national convention in 1888, and presided as chairman of the state convention in 1900. In 1902 he was elected to congress and is now serving his fourth term. He soon became a national figure as the sponsor for President Roosevelt's proposed rate bill and was recognized as the friend and advisor of the president. He was chosen by Taft to introduce the railroad bill in the present congress and has been widely quoted as an expert on such legislation. He has been instrumental in the passage of much of the constructive legislation enacted while he has been a member of congress, and no Republican member not on the pensions committee has secured the passage of more private pension bills. He will make a thorough canvass of the state on a progressive platform.

WILLIAM M. SMITH.

Among the candidates for attorney general in the Republican party, the earliest announcement came from William M. Smith of St. Johns, who has been prominent in state politics for a number of years. He was a presidential elector in 1901 and is a member of the Republican state central committee from the Eighth congressional district.

As one of the younger men of the party he stands for progressive ideas in the handling of public questions. His position was well stated when, as chairman of the Republican convention, he spoke in favor of the cleaning out of the "parts or predicted a loss of power."

Flamingoes' Tongues.

The heavily Vitellius, as Gibbon calls him, spent at least six millions of money on table in as many months. He invented, or his cook invented for him, a dish which he designated "the shield of Minerva." One of its principal ingredients was flamingoes' tongues, of which both Pliny and Martial speak in encomiastic terms. Dalgleish says that the flamingoes have "large tongues, and near the root is a piece of fat which is accounted a great dainty." When Captain Owen was surveying the east coast of Africa his sailors shot down hundreds of these beautiful birds in order, with an extravagance worthy of Vitellius, to make a dish of the tongues alone.

FIRST CHANCE OF MICHIGAN VOTERS

To Name Man of Their Choice by Popular Vote

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES SENATOR

Will be at Primary Tuesday, September 6

Hon. Charles E. Townsend Represents Progressive Thoughts of People Today—Senator Burrows Has Resisted It.

Michigan voters are to nominate a candidate to represent the state in the United States senate for six years from March 4th, next. This is to be done at the primary election on September 6th. It is the first time in the history of the commonwealth that the people name a United States senator by direct vote. It is a highly important function and a great privilege. We most thoroughly believe in the plan, though it may take several such elections to awaken the mass of voters to appreciate the right and its far reaching consequences. The system virtually elects such officers by popular vote. There is no good reason why these officers should not be thus chosen. There are now two names prominently mentioned for the position viz., Senator Julius Ceasar Burrows and Hon. Charles E. Townsend. Mr. Burrows is now 73 years of age, has held the office 16 years, and before that was a representative in the lower house of Congress for 18 years. He has thus been highly honored: he has not dishonored the state, though not a constructive statesman nor a forceful character like Chandler, nor a keen business man and great administrator like McMillan. His most ardent friends must admit that he has lost much of his later appearance in public life and his work in the senate have been anything but flattering or forceful. Mr. Townsend is one of Michigan's best known and most popular representatives in Congress. He is in the very prime of life. A fine thinker, a good citizen, a successful lawyer, an excellent speaker, one of the few congressmen whose ability makes him known among beyond the confines of the state. There is not the slightest question as to his ability. By nature, education, training, experience and character he would take a front rank in the upper house of the nation's law-making body. But the selection of United States senator just now reaches far above these personalities, important as they are. During the past decade of American history there has appeared a wonderously strong, far-reaching, and altogether admirable spirit of civic righteousness. The movement popularly called the "square deal reformation," launched and fostered by Pres. Roosevelt, touches a most prominent chord of public sentiment. The control of great corporations, the elimination of special privileges, the punishment of grafters, business methods in government affairs, open and above board conduct of national affairs, a sensible downward revision of the tariff, conservation of natural resources—these and a general stand for righteousness characterized the administration of the man who is today the most popular man in the world. In all these things the plain people of Michigan in an overwhelming majority supported Pres. Roosevelt, and today stand for his ideals in national administration. All this was opposed most bitterly and obstinately though of necessity at times most secretly, slyly, cladestinely and indirectly by many great corporations and their agents in Congress, Messrs Cannon, Aldrich, Burrows and others. Mr. Burrows once in private conversation referred to Pres. Roosevelt as "That thing in the White House." To be sure he may have been goaded to say it by the fact that the president had referred to him as "That old scheezicks, Burrows." However this may be, it is true that our senior senator did all he dared to in opposing the Roosevelt policies. He does not in this represent the majority of the people of this state. Mr. Burrows voted with Senator Aldrich and the "interests" in every vote but one favoring the great corporations in the tariff measure. If it had been left us Mr. Burrows voted for it, we should have been in a pretty plight indeed. It was only Pres. Taft's interference and insistence that finally secured in the conference the measure which is on severe trial right now. Where would his party and his people have been had the Aldrich Burrows combine succeeded? It is the fragment of their work that is giving the party their troubles today. Mr. Burrows long ago ceased to represent Michigan sentiment on the great national questions. On this ground as well as declining intellectual and physical vigor he should be left at home, and a better and truer representative of Michigan's sentiment be put in his place. Mr. Townsend stood loyally by Pres. Roosevelt, he has not broken with his party. He is Pres. Taft's efficient representative in important administrative and popular measures now. He has consistently, wisely and in a dignified manner, spoken and voted steadily for the "square deal" policies. Cannon and the "interests" have sought to discipline him for his vote to curb the "czar." The people of Michigan like him and believe in him and they have the opportunity next September to put him in line for the United States senate where they would have a most worthy and able man to help carry forward the great work began by Pres. Roosevelt.—From Moderator-Topics. Published by H. R. Pattengill.

DISEASES OF TREES

Explained in Article in Mt. Pleasaot Times.

Tree Blight, San Jose Scale, Clover Blight and Their Treatment.

I have had a good many inquiries as to the above disease, and now is the time to give them strictest attention. The leaves upon the pear and apple tree turn dark brown to black as if they were scorched by fire. Especially upon the under branches the blossom shrivel up and die. The tree blight seems to do a great deal of damage in this locality, and I know of one or two fruit men who have given up the cultivation of certain varieties because of the injuries that it has caused. The disease is bacterial and is carried from tree to tree by insects at the time of polination, or it may be carried by birds. The bacteria like all bacteria, multiplies very rapidly, and causes the disease to spread. The disease spreads downward through the twigs of larger branches and kills them. Some believe the disease to be the result of cold weather, but this is not so.

As to treatment, it has been demonstrated that the blight may be stopped by the following methods: Going over the orchard carefully once a week and watching for all blighted blossoms, leaves of twigs. The blighted blossoms must be pulled off and burned and the twigs must be cut and burned. In the latter case the trunks should be disenfected with corrosive sublimate, kerosene or corbolic acid. The above solutions may be applied on a cloth, and the knife wiped off each time after the sprouts should be removed as they are especially liable to infection. Later in the fall all cancers, that is, dried, withered parts of the trunk should be cut out and burned and the cuts disinfected The disenfectant may be applied by a sponge. Anyone who is interested in trees should watch them very carefully as to the above blight, because the disease can be stopped by prompt appplication as suggested.

There is another insect that is causing some trouble here. It is known as the clover mite. Strictly speaking, however, it is not an insects, but a mere relative. The mites are tiny and red, resembling plant lice, and have the habit of crawling into buildings in the spring and autumn and upon the sides of buildings, getting through crevices upon the furniture, books and tables. They are so fragle that it is next to impossible to brush them off, as they crush so easily, leaving a red stain. This is especially disagreeable when they crawl into open books. Closing the books or shifting the paper is sure to result in tiny red blotches. The best way to keep these mites out of buildings is to spray the ontside foundatioo walls with kerosene or to coat them with a narrow band of some sticky mixture such as tanglefoot, printer's ink or something similar. The do some damage to the clovers, causing them to whiten but the the principle difficulty is as I have outlined above, and many housekeepers in Mt. Pleasant have been bothered this spring by the clover mite.

Another insect that is causing some trouble is the San Jose scale. This has been found in one or two trees upon the Normal grounds. The scale attacks shade trees and kills them as well as fruit trees. They may be recognized upon the bark as tiny gray specks just as if ashes had been sprinkled over the bark of the trees. The insects suck the juice from the tree and thus injure it, and also insert a poison into the tree. Trees should be watched carefully and should the above appearance suggest the San Jose scale the trunk may be washed in a lime sulpher solution. That is, the lime and sulpher applied with a broom, but it should not be used as a spray at this time of year, as it will kill the leaves. The lime and sulpher may be obtained from the Dow Chemical Works or any drug store in town, and directions as to use accompany the solution. The tree that is affected with this scale upon the Normal grounds is maple so that only one may be able to recognize the disease after examining the tree. M. A. COBB.

WARNING TO OWNERS OF DOGS.

In view of the fact that three boys are now in Ann Arbor taking treatment for rabies, from bites of dogs, official examination of which after being killed, proved that they were rabid, it behooves every owner of a dog to exercise the utmost precaution. The city ordinance prescribes that all dogs must be SECURELY muzzled. An order of the State and City Board of Health has prescribed the same ruling. This ruling will be strictly enforced.

It is impossible to say how soon the most peaceful dog will turn rabid. The city police offices have been instructed to make complaint against the owner of such dog, where known, and the owners will be prosecuted under the ordinance, which prescribes a heavy fine and penalty for disregard thereof. There is no room for sentiment in face of such a condition as now confronts us. If you own a dog, you must comply with the law, or expect arrest for negligence. No one loves a good dog better than myself. But the law is plain, and hereafter the owner will have to stand punishment as well as the dumb animal who does not know the law and cannot be expected to comply therewith.

WILL E. HAMPTON,
Mayor.

LARGE CROWD WERE PRESENT

At Meeting of Charlevoix County Pomona Grange.

HELD WITH THE IRONTON GRANGE

Principal Speaker Was Mrs. Dora Stockman of Lansing.

Committe on Grange Rallies and State Grange Exhibit Appointed Next Meeting With Norwood August 18.

June 23, Ironton Grange entertained one of the most successful Pomona Grange meetings ever held in Charlevoix County. Nearly two hundred patrons were present and from the moment that Worthy Masters' Mears' gavel fell, there was something "doing." With but one exception all officers were present.

After a brief Fifth degree session, in which the standing committees were instructed to get "busy," a most bountiful spread furnished by the local grange was enjoyed by all. After dinner Worthy Lecturer Walter Black presented a literary program of high order. Of particular note were two addresses, one by Mrs. Dora Stockman, of Lansing, Mich., "The Farm Art Gallery." Mrs. Stockman proved a very pleasing speaker and handled her subject admirably, fully convincing her hearers of the wisdom and necessity of cultivating a deeper appreciation of the artistic side of farm life.

Brother E. B. Ward's presentation of the plan and purpose of the Straits of Mackinac Association was closely followed and the occasion will no doubt add substantial support to a very deserving and progressive movement to secure the proper and equitable marketing of Michigan fruit. An excellent essay prepared and read by Mrs. Josephine Ingalls was ordered published in local papers. Resolutions of sympathy and respect relative to the sudden death of Sister Clara Wagner, member of Boyne River Grange, were adopted and ordered published.

The public were admitted during the first half of the evening session and were entertained by a varied program of songs, instrumental music, recitations, etc., furnished by the local grange and others. Witty and interesting talks were given by Mrs. Stockman, E. S. Stacks, J. H. Milford and others. Several made pointed reference to the present status of local option in Charlevoix County, and the manner in which their remarks were received was indicative of universal satisfaction with prevailing conditions as compared with previous conditions.

Brothers Nat Burns, E. H. Clark and M. J. Staley were elected as committee on State Grange exhibits.

Twenty two applicants for Fifth degree membership were initiated in an impressive manner by Marion Center degree team. A committee of three composed of Brothers Frank Hammond, John A. Newville and John H. Bugbee were appointed to arrange time and place for grange rallies. A rising vote of thanks was given Marion Center degree team for their excellent work and Ironton Grange for their hospitable entertainment. The next Pomona meeting will be held with Norwood Grange, August 18. The special order at this meeting will be the adoption of new By-Laws. As several important changes will be recommended by the committees on By-Laws, every Pomona member should make it a point to attend this meeting.

WORK OF CONGRESS

Which Ended Long Session Last Saturday Night

Much Important Legislation Was Enacted Into Law.

Congress concluded its long session Saturday with a record for enacting legislation that has seldom, if ever, been equalled.

In the matter of the "reform" movements for which President Taft stood sponsor the session has, in many instances, been a success. Chief in the list of measures for which the administration contended that were passed are:

Revision of the railroad laws.

The admission of Arizona and New Mexico to statehood.

The establishment of the postal savings bank system.

Conferring on the president of unlimited authority to withdraw public lands for conservation purposes.

Authorization of the issuance of $20,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness to complete reclamation projects.

A provision for publicity of campaign contributions.

The creation of a bureau of mines.

The extension of the activities of the tariff board.

A law looking to the suppression the traffic in "white slaves."

The creation of a commission to consider economies in federal government administration.

The provisions of a new tariff system for the Phillippines.

Legislation which is expected to give prohibition to the Hawaiian Islands.

Among the measures which failed to pass were: Ship subsidy; anti-injunction; bureau of health; bill providing for increased rates of postage for second class matter.

An important feature of the session was the revision of the rules of the house.

Over 27,000 bills have been introduced in the house and over 9,000 in the senate, in addtion to hundreds of resolutions. This is a record.

Measures to conserve the natural resources, to open large sections of land to settlement, to increase the navy, to safeguard railroad employes, to strengthen the pure food laws, to revise the immigration laws and to raise the battleship Maine were among other legislation passed, in addition to the usual supply measures.

More than $1,000,000,000 was appropriated at the present session of congress if the continuing appropriations are incorporated in the totals of the general appropriation measures.

CHASE S. OSBORN NEXT WEDNESDAY

Will Put in a Busy Day in This County

AT OPERA HOUSE IN THE EVENING

Speaks at Boyne Falls, Boyne City, East Jordan and Ironton

Mammoth Crowd will Be Here to Hear the Man Who Probably Will be Our Next Governor.

Chase S. Osborn, of Sault Ste. Marie, who is a candidate for the republican domination for governor, will make a flying trip through Charlevoix county on July 6, and will close the day by addressing a meeting at the Charlevoix Theater in the evening.

He will start the day at Boyne Falls, where he will be from 9:30 a. m. until 10:30. From there he goes by automobile to Boyne City, where he will address a mid day meeting, and will then go to East Jordan, where he will speak at 3:00 p. m. He will make a stop at Ironton, where he will arrive about 5:00, and will come from that place direct to Charlevoix.

Mr. Osborn is making a whirlwind campaign, endeavoring to cover as much of the state as possible, and wherever he goes he makes friends and votes. He is an eloquent and fearless speaker, and every voter should endeavor to hear what he has to say on state affairs. It is expected that excursions will be run from Boyne City and East Jordan for the night meeting here, and there is no doubt the opera house will be well-filled, for our people are all anxious to see and hear the man who is not afraid to call a spade a spade, the man who if chosen governor, will be governor all the time.

VISITED NEIGHBORS

Charlevoix Board of Commerce Did This Week

In the Interests of Western Michigan Development Bureau.

Monday night a number of the members of the Charlevoix board of commerce made the trip to East Jordan where they met with the members of the board of commerce of that city.

After a lunch, which was served at the Russell House to the Charlevoix visitors, the meeting was called to order and Secretary Gibson, of the West Michigan Development bureau, who was present, explained the object of the meeting.

The work which the bureau had planned for next year and the necessity of knowing whether Charlevoix county would retain her membership. Both of the directors from this county, Payton and Robbins, were present and it was fully explained how Charlevoix City had pledged her quota of the fee required and the amount asked of East Jordan and Boyne City. All of the members of the East Jordan board spoke enthusiastically of the work which was done last year and the amount asked of their city was pledged to Mr. Gibson.

Tuesday night a still larger crowd went to Boyne City, East Jordan visitors also being present, and a rousing meeting was held.

Boyne City pledged her share, completing the amount asked of Charlevoix county.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

GOOD SUBSTITUTE FEEDS FOR OATS

After many experiments at a government station it was decided by experts that oilmeal and cottonseed meal is an excellent substitute for oats. A report of the experiment follows:

First.—The health, spirit and endurance of work horses were the same when fed corn with a moderate amount of oilmeal or gluten feed or cottonseed meal as when fed a corn and oats ration, supplying a similar nutritive ratio.

Second.—The ration of corn and oilmeal maintained the weight, flesh and appearance of the horses fully as well as and with less expense than the one of similar nutritive value composed of corn and oats.

Third.—With corn at 50 cents a bushel, oats at 40 cents and oilmeal at

FINE BRED PERCHERON.
(By courtesy of Iowa State college.)

$32 per ton, the average saving in the daily expense of feed for each workday amounted to 16 cents by the use of oilmeal in the place of oats.

Fourth.—A brief trial of ninety-one days with gluten feed indicated that, while it was capable of giving good results, the ration containing it was not as palatable as the oilmeal ration and cost a trifle more per pound when gluten feed was worth $28 a ton.

Fifth.—Cottonseed meal gave somewhat better results on the whole than oilmeal. The ration containing it was fully as palatable and as efficient in maintaining the health and weight of the horses. It was less laxative and a little cheaper with cottonseed meal at $30 a ton.

Sixth.—With corn at 50 cents a bushel and oats at 40 cents, oilmeal had a value of fully $60 a ton for feeding to work horses, with cottonseed meal worth a trifle more still. At the usual prices of these feeds their use resulted in a substantial lowering of the cost of maintaining the horses.

POULTRY AND FRUIT.

One Man Found the Combination a Good Paying Proposition.

By the natural association of ideas one thinks of some opposite or related thing when another is mentioned. Thus white suggests black, the sun the moon, summer suggests winter, clouds suggest rain, and growing fruit suggests poultry as a natural and inevitable combination necessary for success.

Years ago one man started in to grow fruits. The trees thrived, fruit set plentifully, but there were worms in the peaches, plums fell off, apples dropped, grapes were denuded of leaves, and bugs of various sorts worked in the strawberries and blackberries.

Professional horticulturists advised spraying with some of the many fungicides and poisons. But his small amount of fruit would not justify the cost of a practical spraying outfit, and the hand power sprayer was a back breaker, besides proving costly and inefficient.

As the damage to his fruits came principally from insects, he determined to get after them. In one corner of the grounds was a sweet pea trench with plants perfect in leaf and bloom that grew and blossomed profusely. Every other trench of sweet peas in the neighborhood was riddled and ruined by grasshoppers. An old hen with a flock of chicks fist size tethered near the thrifty trench of peas suggested the poultry and fruit combination. If they kept the bugs from the peas enough of them would keep down the insects in the fruit yard.

A strong argument for the fruit and poultry combination is immediate returns. Under the most favorable conditions you must wait for from two to five years for a good crop. Strawberries alone pay well the first year. Grapes, blackberries and raspberries yield well the second year and heavily the third and fourth. Peaches and plums should begin to yield well in three or four years and apples in from five to seven. But the hen pays the next day after her purchase—pays in eggs, pays a few weeks later in chickens and pays all the time in the destruction of insects.

If the poultry investment is made as it should be, when the trees are planted, the results are much better. But an old orchard may be cleaned up and greatly benefited by cultivation, giving the poultry a chance to get the grubs that develop later into injurious insects or feed on tree roots. The hen in her capacity to do good by destruction of insects and to grow into money in eggs and meat has the greatest possibilities in the way of a money maker of anything on the farm. Without counting the benefits, only figuring net cash returns, the United States census of 1900 shows that poultry brought in 100 per cent per annum. Their worth to the farm because of insects and weed seeds destroyed is equal to another 400 per cent. The health and pleasure made possible by fruit on the farm table the year round are fully another 400 per cent. No other combination on the farm can come within hailing distance of this combination.

Force of Habit.

"I understand that all star cast was rather languid."

"Yes; they played poorly for stars. Even the life they put into the mob scene was accidental and came about merely through each of them trying to grab the center of the stage."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Trouble Makers.

"What men think," remarked the knowing woman, "causes fully one-third of all the trouble in the world."

"Yes," rejoined the mere man, "and what women say causes the other two-thirds."—Chicago News.

CHAPTER XIV.

HAGGLETON'S BAKERY TRUST.

HAGGLETON'S plans for the bakery combine were large. He spoke of them tentatively to Philip, adding cautiously:

"But don't talk about that yet. We have got to show these fellows substantial profits before we can get them in deeper. Besides," he added, with a sharp glance, "it won't be a case of profit for all of them."

Haggleton lowered his voice.

"We have six bakers in the combination already. Within a week we'll have ten. Within two weeks we'll have all the bakers around here tumbling over themselves to get in. So," he smiled, "don't you see?"

"What?"

"These outside bakers won't be able to stand against us. Inside of six months half of the bakeshop bosses down here will be working for the combination."

Philip looked serious.

"Is that—is that necessary?"

"It's the law," said Haggleton grimly, "the law in big things and little things, that the master mind rules."

No doubt the arguments advanced by Philip in his own mind to satisfy his own uneasiness regarding Haggleton's methods would have been met by other arguments had Gentle been there to counsel him, but the old diver had been away a great deal with the wrecking boats. And it was not until the third week that Philip was really brought face to face with facts as they were. This came about through his call on Margaret after her return to Mrs. Binney's boarding house.

Radiantly happy, proud of her hero, the girl had yet seen that very afternoon on her return a cloud gathering upon the horizon of their future in common. A baker's assistant whose wife she had nursed through a protracted illness, a man, therefore, sorely in need of continued employment, had appealed to her for intercession. It was serious news, and it was made more serious by Gentle, who was present. The news was that the bakeshop combination had done the assistant a cruel wrong by depriving him of his job in a bakeshop on Madison street. He was a victim of the kneading machine, cast adrift and desperate.

Get another place? Where? He had been to three other bakeshops where men had been discharged on account of the very same machine, and two of them were fathers of families. That was a nice business for Philip Ames to be in, wasn't it, and he calling himself a friend of the poor?

So he railed on and presently stumbled away, leaving a message that Philip could go straight to a hotter place than any bakeshop.

Gentle looked troubled. He hesitated a moment; then, as he met her brave, comprehending gaze, he decided that she could help and that now was the moment to do it. So he told her exactly what was on his mind. There was an old proneness in Philip to money love. It was a fault that had come through his father, who was—well, she knew Mr. Haggleton, did she not? Philip's mother was the finest woman Gentle had ever known, a true womanly woman. In some ways Margaret reminded him of her, and he was sure she could influence him wonderfully for good if she understood this danger. Philip was full of the noblest ideals. His soul rebelled at the unfairness of things. He was a fighter; but, alas, he could fight two ways—selfishly and unselfishly.

Gentle felt that this was a critical time in Philip's development. Had Margaret not noticed how absorbed he was in this bakeshop scheme?

"It's all Mr. Haggleton's fault," declared Margaret.

"Mr. Haggleton is the occasion," Gentle replied judiciously; "the cause is in the blood."

Margaret tried to draw from Gentle facts about Philip's mother.

"Did she realize that there was this other side to him?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, she realized it; she realized it fully. And sometimes it frightened her to think that with all her love and care she could not free Philip from this—this tendency to be like his father."

"How did she know he had it?"

"Even as a boy he was wonderfully shrewd in making bargains with other boys. I tell you, Margaret," he went on, "there is so much at stake here that—well, the selfish Philip must not win; the other Philip, his mother's son, must win."

"Oh, yes!" cried Margaret.

"And with your help he can win, but we mustn't forget that the enemy is there to be reckoned with."

"You mean his father's son?"

"Exactly," replied Gentle.

All this had prepared Margaret for a serious talk with Philip when he called that evening, but when he came she was quite disarmed by his attitude of fondness and submission. He at once admitted that he had been too much absorbed by this bakeshop affair. But now that the enterprise was fairly started he could soon leave it safely to "Mr. Jackson," and without fail he would set apart certain hours every day for the further enlightenment of Haggleton about the sufferings and miseries of the poor.

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

Margaret was delighted and said to herself that, after all, there would be no such trouble as Gentle had foreseen.

In furtherance of his good intentions Philip had a talk with Haggleton the next morning. Gentle being present, and they made it clear to the old man that his bakeshop activities must not take his attention from the problems of poverty.

The talk inevitably drifted right then and there into a discussion of the surroundings in which laboring men worked in general and the helpers of the combine in particular.

"They ought to have shorter hours," declared Philip, "with time for exercise and pleasure, and employers should be required by law to protect them from injury and disease."

There was a ring of conviction in his voice, and Gentle looked at Haggleton with a challenging smile. The old man understood that hostilities were declared between them and smiled back confidently. After all, this was his son, and with a little wise guidance there was no danger of his accepting any foolish sentimental standards.

"You killed Jenny's husband."

"How can employers prevent injuries and disease?" he asked.

"By creating healthful conditions of work and by using proper safety appliances," answered Gentle. "These appliances exist in all dangerous trades, but employers refuse to put them in because they cost money."

Haggleton thought a moment and then asked sharply, "Do you think there is any appliance that would keep bakers from breathing flour dust?"

"Why—er," answered Gentle, taken aback—"I don't know."

"It isn't likely, is it? And yet we've got to have bread. Besides," he added, looking at Philip, "suppose there was such an appliance and it cost $500, could we afford it?"

"Not just now," said Philip.

"Ah," laughed Haggleton, "that's the way with lots of things—we can't afford them just now. It's easy to condemn big corporations, but when you come down to it the people who do the condemning are built on the same plan. They want to do fine things, but they can't afford to—just now."

That evening in the Moran home, where Jenny was beginning to be sorely missed, Gentle produced scrap books containing facts for Haggleton's further edification. Moran was out in the streets searching for his daughter, as was his nightly custom now. Philip stood at the window. Haggleton and Gentle girded themselves for the struggle. It was for him that they were fighting.

"I'd like to show you some statements," began Gentle, opening one of the scrap books, "that bear on the subject of safety devices and the accidents caused by lack of them. You're a great railroad magnate, one of seven men who own most of the railroads in the United States."

"I have some influence in railroad matters, but"—

"Yes, you have some influence," said Gentle dryly. "Do you know how many people your railroads kill and injure every year?"

"No," answered Haggleton.

"I have the figures here," said Gentle, pointing to the scrap book, "and they show that in the year just past you and your fellow magnates killed over 10,000 persons on the railroads of the United States. You killed Jenny's husband. That's the truth, Mr. Haggleton. You may ask why I dwell on railroad accidents when our problem is poverty. Because there is a terrible relation between the two. You speak contemptuously of those who have failed in life. You like to think that the million or more in this city who are in poverty are there by their own fault. I want you to know that thousands of them are there because you railway kings have failed to do your duty."

Haggleton made an angry gesture. Gentle lifted his hand.

"Let me finish. In the past year over 80,000 persons were injured by railway accidents in the United States, and most of them poor people, foreigners of them your own employees! Think of that—80,000 crippled and maimed in one of your enterprises! There is part of your magnate handiwork. You take these workingmen into your service, these passengers into your trains, you accept their toil or their money, and then, instead of protecting them by safety appliances that are perfectly well known and in constant use abroad, you torture them in criminal wrecks, you burn them, you scald them, you tear off their hands or feet, you crush their legs or arms, you wrench their backs, you fracture their skulls. You do this to little children, to mothers, to young men; you [illegible] the year to over 200 of your [illegible]."

Haggleton was silent.

"Why is it that in a given number of railway employees America kills nearly three times as many as England and injures five times as many?" asked Gentle.

"America is a bigger country, with ten miles of railroad where England has one mile."

Gentle shook his head.

"I made allowances for that. I said we killed more in proportion."

"Our people are in a hurry. They insist on going fast, and that increases the danger."

"Pardon me," replied Gentle, "the fastest trains in the world are in Europe."

"You talk like a child!" retorted Haggleton. "You know nothing about conditions."

"No? I know this—that for years you magnates fought against air brakes and automatic couplers, although you knew they would save thousands of lives. Now you're fighting the system of block signals that is used everywhere in England and that would save thousands of lives more."

"We have block signals on some railroads," insisted Haggleton.

"On very few, and where you have them you don't use them half the time. Your own engineers have admitted that when forced to testify about accidents."

"If we had to run freight trains under strict block signals we'd never get our business done," snorted the old man. "Think of the freight piling up all over this country, millions and millions of dollars' worth, far beyond what the roads can handle and much of it perishable. We've promised to move it, and we've got to move it, haven't we?"

"No, sir!" flashed Philip. "Not if it means destroying lives."

"Besides," resumed Gentle, "it's not only in railroading that you slaughter people. It's the same in mining and building and manufacturing. Here's an article"—he turned to another page—"that estimates at over half a million a year our casualties in various industries largely controlled by your trusts. Half a million killed and injured every year and the greater part needlessly! How? By dangerous machinery in your factories that might be protected, by wheels and saws and flying belts that might be covered, by poisonous fumes and deadly dust that might be guarded against, by explosions in your mines that might be avoided, by falls, by fires, by insidious disease, by a hundred perils that beset your toilers, all of which might be lessened or removed, but for one thing."

"What's that?" asked Haggleton.

Gentle seemed not to hear. His kind, thoughtful eyes were fixed on Philip as if speaking to the boy's soul.

"Half a million killed and injured every year!" he went on sadly. "Nine times the total loss in the battle of Waterloo! Nearly all of them workingmen in the prime of life, wage earners whose injury means distress or ruin to a family! Think of the poor wives, the helpless children—more recruits for poverty, more tenement misery, more wrecks! And the greater part of this immense harm might be averted but for one thing."

"Yes?" said Philip eagerly. "What is that?"

Gentle looked steadily at Haggleton. "You know what I mean?"

"No."

Then slowly and impressively the old diver spoke.

"I have studied this question. I have lived it, and I tell you, sir, you are defending a bad cause. You know that three-fourths of these accidents might be avoided and all this wretchedness and pain be spared us and this enormous waste of human energy prevented if you great captains of industry had not made up your minds that it's cheaper to kill men than to protect them."

CHAPTER XV.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

THINGS were going well with the combination—two new bakers had been taken in, business was steadily increasing and, in view of substantial profits, they were already thinking of getting a second kneading machine and widening their field of operations. But Haggleton was not having all plain sailing with Gentle, Margaret and Philip. The old diver and the girl exerted their utmost efforts to keep Philip from consenting to the development of the business further in a field that would throw men with families to support out of work. At last they succeeded.

Gentle was so pleased with the progress of things that he could not refrain from pushing his advantage, and one evening he turned the talk upon a subject where he felt himself particularly strong and Haggleton indefensibly weak—that is, the unfair division of the products of toil. What right had an employer, he asked, to keep a woman sewing carpets all day and then take half of what she earned? Suppose the woman did the work at a private house, as often happened. Then her employer charged the owner of the carpets, say, $3 a day for the woman's services and gave her a dollar and a half. That was not fair. The employer's part in this effort was too small to justify him in keeping so much of her earnings. It was the woman who did the work and breathed carpet dust and took chances of infection; the employer merely secured her the job and furnished needle and thread.

Gentle contended that this was precisely the situation between capital and labor all over the country, the capitalist taking about half of what the laborer earned, whereas a fair division would leave the rich quite rich enough and practically do away with poverty.

Was it not a monstrous injustice, he went on, that a few hundred New Yorkers should every year draw from vast unearned fortunes an income aggregating more than the total yearly earnings of a million fellow citizens born in poverty?

If Gentle had stopped here all might have been well, for Philip agreed with him thoroughly so far, but in the ela-

The Farmer and His Bank Account

The farmer, more so than any other business man, requires the services of a bank, if he manages his farm in a systematic way. While he has no need of a set of books in which to keep a record of every transaction made, yet, during the course of a year he may pay out large sums of money for various purposes, and a record for future reference is highly important. Merchants may fail to give a receipt for cash, a neighbor may not recall the payment of money.

THE DOG QUESTION

Is Still A Live One in the City of Charlevoix.

Result of Further Examinations at Ann Arbor University.

The dog question is still with us, there being no doubt that we have had not only one but several rabid dogs in the city, the following reports having been received by Health Officer Wilkinson from three dogs whose heads were sent to Ann Arbor for investigation the past week.

A. M. Wilkinson, M. D.
Charlevoix, Mich.
Dear Doctor:

Two dogs received June 21, report as follows: Small dog rabid. The brain of the large dog degenerated and contaminated to such degree that it was impossible to make diagnosis. Small white and brown terrier received an examination shows that dog was rabie.

Jas. G. Cummings, M. D.
Hygenic Laboratory, Ann Arbor.

Pastenr Institute.
June 26, 1910.

There are now three patients in Ann Arbor, being treated from this city at a cost to the city of from $75 to $100 for each patient. As the Mayor say in his notice published this week, "The time for sentiment is past," and all should co-operate with the officials in ridding the city of its danger.

For the guidance of our citizens we print the following from standard authority.

"A mad dog never yelps or barks. If he makes any sound it is a howl, said to be impossible to describe, but never forgotten when once heard.' A mad dog never froths at the mouth. A brown, ropy mucus hangs from his mouth, which he often tries to paw off with his forelegs. A mad dog never runs about much. He is usually alone and jogs along slowly from place to place, paying no attention to things unless they come in his way. He is usually alone and jogs along slowly from place to place, paying no attention to things unless they come in his way. He is supposed to dread water, but he does not. He will plunge his head into it and will cross streams if they lie across his path. In the last stages of the disease he can't swallow water, and it is difficult for him even to lap it.

The disposition of a dog often changes if he is mad. A frisky dog is apt to become quiet, and the quiet dog is apt to become frisky. There are no more cases of rabies in the summer time than winter. There is no mad dog season to fear.

We can stop having rabies or mad dogs in our country in a short time if we are willing to do as they have done in a number of European countries. They have had no rabies in England for nine years. The authorities there issued an order that all dogs should be muzzled when let out of doors. Any dogs found unmuzzled, unless held by a leash, were captured and the owners fined; or if the owners could not be found, the dogs were killed. In a short time they had no rabies."

Literary Notes

The Rural Delivery Man.

"That he is a public benefactor is unhoubtedly true," says Bertha Pudd Weyl in Woman's Home Companion for July. "But his usefulness would be immeasurately increased if he were allowed to extend his business. People who live on the country routes would joyfully welcome a chance to send and receive packages by the rural carriers if the post office department would charge only a reasonable rate for the service. Under the present postal laws it costs eighty cents to send five pounds of rice by a carrier from the village postoffice and general store to a customer living on a rural route, though for sixty cents the same package can be sent to England or any of twenty-nine foreign countries. It is strange that fifteen million people take their own parcels back and forth to town and that the Rural Free Delivery has an annual deficit?

"This delicit is not small. There are 38,215 routes which average annually $130 in receipts and $850 in expenses. This means a net loss of $720 per route or a total loss of $27,514,800. Quite a big price for failure to adopt ordinary business methods.

"Several plans have been suggested to obviate this annual deficit. A special rate might be made for the rural service, five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound up to eleven. Provision may be made for carrying, at special rates, packages originating on the line of the special route, as on an average trip a carrier handles but twenty pounds of mail with facilities for handling five hunred pounds. All this could be done without any increase in expenditures, and it is estimated that the increased grocery trade alone would cover the dreaded $27,514,800 delicit.

"Consider what this increase in trade would mean to the country store. It would bring to its doors customers from a radius of twenty and thirty miles, it would reach the needs and purses of, on an average four hundred and fifty people in a single delivery route, and, if you count all the routes, fifteen million men, women and children, the number that the Parcels Post of the Rural Free Delivery would benefit. Does it not seem as though they should be consulered?".

Proper Way to Veal Calves.

Calves that are to be vealed should receive whole milk for at least two or three weeks. It may seem a little expensive to feed whole milk for so long a period, but we believe that if the calves are to be vealed at all it pays to follow this system rather than attempt to raise them entirely upon skimmilk. The first three or four days the milk from the mother is not fit for other purposes except to use for her calf. If account is kept of all the whole milk used it will be found that it will not amount to a great deal. Gradually changing at the end of the second or third week to skimmilk and permitting the calf to eat all the dry grain and mixing a little blood meal in the skimmilk is probably as good a practice as any to follow.

Bonemeal For Hogs.

Because of the variability of the phosphorus content of different feeds and of different soils and of the water of different localities there is no better way to feed bonemeal than to put it into a trough and set this where the pigs can have free access to it at all times. Bonemeal, however, should not be fed as the only mineral substance. The pig should also have salt air slaked lime, charcoal and hard wood ashes. These may all be fed the same as specified for bonemeal—namely, separately in a trough or in different parts of the same trough. The pig can then help himself to the desirable quantity of the various ingredients that his metabolism calls for.

Rustling Ability of Milk Goats.

The milk goats, like all goats, can make a living on brushy and hilly land where most all other animals would starve. They are very industrious at land in cleaning it of weeds, sprouts and brush. They cannot endure low, wet land, but thrive perfectly on rough and hilly land. Those giving milk should be fed on grass, fodder and wheat bran but no grain of any kind.

GOOD WATERING TANK.

Stockman Suggests One of Concrete That Is Servicable and Durable.

One thing necessary on a well regulated farm is a good watering tank for the stock. Many farmers use no judgment and build their tanks of wood, and in a short time they find them almost useless and are compelled to go to the expense of building others, making the proposition a costly one. Now, as this is expensive, why not construct one of concrete? It can be had at small cost and is very durable in all kinds of weather. A well known stockman gives the following information regarding the construction of a round concrete tank: It can be made any size desired, is easily built and most satisfactory, as animals can surround it and drink without troubling one another. To build such a tank one simply sets a stick, or, better, an iron bar or a piece of pipe, in the earth at the center of the place the tank is to be; the part that makes the form round should be wired. This forming piece is like a gate; it is half as long as the tank is to be inside, and its outer end shapes in a curve as the builder wishes to have the shape of the tank. Then sand, earth or clay is piled up about the circle, and the form is swung around, and its edge cuts off the surplus, leaving the form finally as round and smooth as the inside of a bowl. This may be plastered with cement and sand; then concrete is thrown against it to make a wall six inches or eight inches thick, with a heavy reenforcement about the upper edge—a cable three-quarters of an inch in diameter or a rod bent to shape. The whole may be accomplished in a day if all goes well.

A ROUND CONCRETE WATERING TANK.

Making Good Cottage Cheese.

Have the milk at 70 to 80 degrees. Measure out pure hydrochloric acid of specific gravity 1.20, at the rate of ten ounces for a hundred pounds of milk. Dilute with ten times its weight of cold water and add to milk gradually, stirring the milk constantly while the acid is being added. Continue the stirring until the curd separates completely, leaving a clear whey entirely free from milkiness. The whey is then removed from the curd and the operation completed, as before. In order to get the proper flavor it will be necessary to mix with the curd some sour, thick milk or cream. The method does not give as satisfactory results as the others described.

Flavor and texture are the most important qualities in cottage cheese. The flavor should be that of mildly sour milk or well ripened cream. There should be an entire absence of all objectionable flavor, such as bitter taste, stable flavor, etc. If the cheese tastes too sour it is usually due to keeping too much whey in the curd. The use of a starter is apt to insure the right kind of flavor. The texture of cottage cheese is largely dependent on the amount of moisture in the cheese. When the percentage of moisture is much below 70 the cheese is harsh, dry and sawdust-like. The right texture of cottage cheese is smooth and free from grittiness.

Underground Epernay.

Epernay, in France, where champagne is made, may be said to be a vast subterranean city. The streets for miles and miles are hewn out of the solid chalk, flanked with piles of bottles of all blends and qualities. This labyrinth of streets, crossings and buildings is lighted only by sputtering candles. Everywhere it is damp, with the thermometer down toward the freezing point. The largest champagne manufacturers in Epernay own underground cellars covering no less than forty five acres and holding 5,000,000 bottles of wine.

Adopted by Charlevoix County Pomona Grange, June 13, 1910:

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God, on June 13, 1910, to remove from our midst Sister Clara Wiegner, of Boyne River Grange, No. 1010, who has for many years been a most faithful and efficient member of our Order, exemplifying in her daily conduct and in her association with her fellow members the noble precepts of our Order, and whereas, in her death our order has sustained a great loss, therefore be it resolved, that we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, and that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and friends of the deceased, looking forward to the time when broken ties will be re-united, and be it further resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be presented to the bereaved family, and published in our local newspapers.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MET

One Hundred Fifty Thousand Booklets to be Issued.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Western Michigan Development bureau held Wednesday of last week, the design of the wall map and booklet were considered. The printing and publishing committee received definate instructions to prepare specifications and obtain bids for the work. It was decided to issue 150,000 copies of the booklet. In regard to the paper, printing, reading matter and general make up the booklet will be superior to the one issued last year.

While it may be possible to obtain lower bids outside the territory, everything being equal, the work will be placed within the district.

Secretary Gibson was instructed to visit the delinquent counties and find out what they are going to do, as the map and booklet designs require that the counties in good standing be known early enough to give them the benefit of the valuable advertising in the booklet and on the map design.

Give the Calf Plenty.

The calves should be well fed, but a lot of calves are fed to death. Four quarts of skimmilk a day is enough for a four-weeks-old calf. As soon as any sign of bowel complaint shows in the droppings reduce the quantity of milk. Give a calf all the hay and bran it will eat and let it run on grass, but do not overfeed on skimmilk. The calf that is reared naturally gets only a small quantity of milk at a time, and the wild cow does not give much at any time.

Caring For the Newborn Lamb.

If you find a lamb thoroughly chilled just after being born put him in a tub of warm water and pour a teaspoonful of gin in a pint of hot water down his throat. This will quickly put him on his feet.

Dipping Trough at Small Cost.

A trough for dipping lambs can be made for very little expense, and no sheep raiser should be without one. A tank 12 feet long, 4 feet deep and 3 feet wide is big enough for lambs and grown animals.

Importance of Skin Color.

Look at the ram's skin. Is it a bright cherry color? It should be. A bright cherry is a good indication of perfect health. If it is blue the ram is going out of condition. A white skin is ordinarily infested with parasites.

Don't Be Tempted by Prices.

Don't be tempted to sell those ewe lambs just because you are offered a good price for them. Remember, if you sell your best your flock is only weakened thereby.

NEW AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

Widespread and Rapidly Growing Interest in Pheasant Rearing.

In an interesting bulletin on "Pheasant Raising in the United States," issued by the department of agriculture, it is stated that within recent years a new industry, the rearing of pheasants, has begun to engage attention in the United States, and propagating ventures, ranging from the single pen with one or two pairs of birds to the pheasantry of many acres and thousands of birds, are scattered throughout the country.

The English ringneck pheasant (Phasianus colchicus × torquatus), a hybrid between the English and ringneck pheasants, has been brought from Europe in large numbers. It is generally correctly named, but is sometimes designated as English pheasant, ringneck pheasant and even Mongolian pheasant. It often has more or less of the blood of the versicolor pheasant of Japan (Phasianus versicolor. In England both the English pheasant and the English ringneck are referred to as the common pheasant.

RINGNECK PHEASANT.

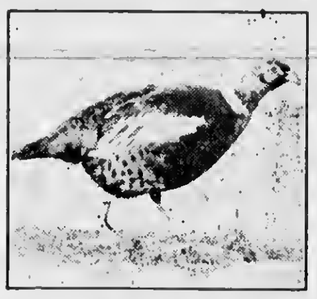
It is the Mongolian pheasant (Phasianus mongolicus), which has a more or less complete white ring about the neck, but in other respects resembles the English pheasant more than it does the ringneck and is rarest of the four kinds in American preserves and aviaries. It is a native of the region about Lake Balkash, central Asia.

A pheasantry may be started with mature birds or with eggs. The latter to be hatched by barnyard fowls. Many are tempted to begin with eggs because of smaller cost, but the uncertainties attendant on hatching the eggs and raising the young are such that it is probably cheaper to secure full-grown birds at the outset. If eggs are to be tried they should be ordered in January or February, to be delivered in April or May. They should be placed under the hen as soon as possible.

Pheasants may be obtained from reputable dealers or they may be imported from Europe or Asia. If stock be imported trouble may be saved by securing it through experienced and reliable bird importers who are familiar with the business. A pen should be provided and supplied with food and water. On the arrival of the birds the crate should be placed in the pen,



MONGOLIAN PHEASANT.

an opening should be made in the crate (preferably in the evening) sufficient to allow the birds to escape one at a time, and the attendant should withdraw, leaving the birds to find their way out alone. For the first few days they should be disturbed as little as possible.

The prices of pheasants vary with the season. They are lowest at the close of the breeding season and increase gradually until the next. They vary also according to the dealer. But so many things are to be considered, such as purity of stock, freedom from disease, care in shipment and other details, that the lowest prices do not always mean the cheapest birds. English ringneck pheasants are least expensive—about $5 a pair.

Any well drained ground is suitable for pheasant pens, but a gentle slope of sandy loam, comparatively cool in midsummer, furnishes ideal conditions. Clay is the poorest soil for the purpose, as it is likely to foster diseases. The pens should be provided with plenty of both sunshine and shade. They should be constructed of chicken wire, like ordinary poultry runs. Each pen should cover at least 100 square feet, more if possible. Contracted quarters induce disease and afford their timid occupants too little protection from alarms. The pen should be from six to eight feet high and should be inclosed above with wire. If the pheasants are likely to be disturbed much, cord netting should be stretched six inches or more below the top wire to prevent the birds from injuring themselves by flying violently against the top, as they are apt to do when frightened.

It is of course feasible to keep pheasants in a pen open at the top by pinioning them or clipping their wings, but pinioning, besides disfiguring pheasants, disables them permanently. Birds that are to be liberated should never be pinioned, as it makes them useless for sport and a ready prey to natural enemies. Clipping is objectionable owing to the necessity for frequent repetitions. Pheasants are timid, and the less they are disturbed the better, especially when breeding.

The pens and sheds should be kept scrupulously clean. There is no more fruitful source of disease among pheasants than uncleanliness. Nevertheless chips and twigs may be scattered about to attract insects, and boughs for shelter should not be omitted. Each pen should be thoroughly spaded and limed every two or three years. Cover should be provided for the birds. The pens may be sown with clover, timothy and other grass early enough to furnish ample cover by the time the birds are turned in. Small evergreens may be grown inside with decided advantage.

Careful protection must be provided against various enemies. The bulletin gives many details of interest and importance to persons intending to rear the birds.

Handy Little Farm Boiler.

Here is a handy portable boiler for light uses on the farm, says the American Agriculturist. It consists of a beer keg screwed to a wooden base, a loop of three-quarter inch iron pipe about three feet long to extend into the kitchen or other fire, a screen of asbestus to protect the keg from the heat, a safety valve and a three-quarter or one inch discharge pipe leading to a one-quarter horsepower engine. The boiler is capable of running a one-quarter horsepower engine for turning a grindstone, a churn and other light machines. It thus can be made to save little drudgeries where larger engines and boilers would be too costly.

Neighborhood Notes

"Ben" Mullin from near Dundee, Ky., is in Cadillac, employed by the Mitchell Diggins iron company. He arrived here from Mancelona last week. "Ben" is a real Kentuckian, with veins overflowing with the blood of the blue grass region and the land of feuds. Dundee is a town situated in the foothills of a region where moonshine whiskey is still manufactured illicitly and where government secret service men do not care to go. "Ben" had the fortune or misfortune to see the commencement of the Spencer-Fugett feud. The heads of the two families were on horseback and talking to each other. An altercation arose, Spencer laid his quirt across Fugett's face, leaving a bleeding welt. Fearing a gun from his shirt bosom Fugett blew the top of his head off. And then the graveyard filling feud was on. Most of the male members of the two factions are now wiped out. "The feuds in Kentucky air gettin' mo' and mo' scarce," "Ben" told the newspaper man, and he seemed to be glad of it.—Cadillac News.

The Ottawa and Chippewa Indians may get another large payment from Uncle Sam. Rep. McLaughlin has introduced a bill permitting those Michigan Indians to go before the court of claims and present their case.

The action follows a careful inquiry made by Mr. McLaughlin and by the Indian bureau at his request. Tentative investigation of the bureau indicates that the government owes these Indians $200,000 principal and interest at six per cent since 1855, aggregating about $860,000. This payment is due under a treaty made about 1836. As originally negotiated, that treaty permitted the Indians to retain certain lands in western and northern Michigan included within the boundries of a large tract they conceded the whites. The senate amended that treaty to permit them to retain those lands five years, but specified that thereafter they should abandon them for a payment of $200,000. The treaty also specified that 6 per cent interest should be paid on unpaid amounts.

Inquiries thus far made indicate that the government has paid no interest since. A final report on the facts will be prepared by the Indian bureau and given to Mr. McLaughlin Saturday. If more complete inquiry confirms the tentative findings the Michigan Indians will get a large payment within a year or two. The Indians benefited live chiefly in the Little and the Big Traverse Bay regions.

Phillip O. Parmalee, formerly of Marion, later of Mancelona, has signed with the Wright Brothers, aviators, to fly a biplane for exhibition purposes. From his youth young Parmalee, but now just over the 20 year mark, has displayed the fact that he is a mechanical genius. From the Eclipse Motor Works at Mancelona, less than a year ago, Phillip Parmalee went to Flint to act as demonstrator and tester for the Buick Auto Co. Step by step he advanced while others stood still. As demonstrator for the Atlantic Branch of the Buick Co., he was sent over the entire southern section of the United States. Last week he finished with the only perfect score in his class in the 31½ days endurance test in the New York Herald Atlanta Journal test from Atlanta, Ga., to New York City. Three passengers were with him. Upon his arrival at New York City a telegram from the Wright Brothers awaited him, telling him to come immediately to their training camp at Dayton, Ohio. From over 1,000 applicants Marion's and Michigan's product has been selected. He is personally acquainted with the Simons brothers, Wright brothers have 61 exhibitions booked for 1910.

According to the decision in the case of the People vs. Dr. Rice, which was recently handed down by the supreme court, a physician cannot be convicted of breaking the liquor law even though they knowingly fill out a prescription for a patient whose condition does not demand liquor. The case originated in Flint where Dr. Rice was arrested on a charge of breaking the liquor law because he made out a prescription for a patient who was alleged to have used the liquor for a beverage instead of a medicine. In the language of the court, "We do not find in the statutes any intention to punish physicians for issuing prescriptions for liquor in bad faith. We mean by this that apt terms are not found to create a substantive offense, the elements of which are writing and giving, carelessly or dishonestly, prescriptions for liquor.

Cure all distressing, dangerous kidney ills.

Plenty of evidence to prove this.

Mrs. John H. Smith, 327 Madison St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "I became so badly run down as the result of kidney trouble that I began to worry about my condition. At times I could hardly endure the backache and I was also subject to headaches. Nothing I took helped me to any extent until I chanced to learn of Doan's Kidney Pills. This preparation acted like a charm. I am now free from pain and feel well in every way, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills."

Mrs. Smith gave the above testimonial in August 1906 and when interviewed on July 30, 1909, she added: "I still consider Doan's Kidney Pills an effective kidney medicine and I can recommend them as highly today as I did a few years ago. cialistic ground where, as Haggleton divined by a flash of intuition, the young man could not follow him. Indeed, it had long been a source of regret to the old diver that Philip would not take very seriously his dreams of a beautiful industrial republic, soon to be realized, according to him.

So presently the tables were turned, and Gentle found himself under a fire of searching questions by Haggleton. Did he believe that the present division of wealth would one day be replaced by a fairer division? Yes. By the will of the people? Yes. But how? Take the railroads. Who would own them? The people. The people would take the railroads? Yes. And pay for them? They had paid for them already, for they built them, forged the steel and hewed the timbers. H'm! Then the eleven billions or so that the railroads were valued at would never be paid to the present owners? Never!

Philip was frowning.

"Will it be the same with the land?" pursued the old man. "Will you Socialists simply take it and make no compensation to present holders?"

"Why discuss this?" objected Gentle.

"Why not discuss it?" replied Haggleton sharply. "You've had your say about our scheme of robbery. Why shouldn't I have a word about yours? Then how about the land? You'll take it, won't you, in your Socialist state, and pay for it?"

"I tell you we have paid for it over and over again."

"I know it. But will you pay for it in any other way?"

"No."

"And the great industries?"

"They will be of no use to you. Conditions will be so bad you will beg the people to take them."

"For nothing?"

"Yes."

"And if by any chance we don't beg you to take them—then you'll take them anyway?"

"Yes."

"Do you call that fair?" asked the old man, turning abruptly to Philip.

"No," said the latter, "I don't."

* * * * * * *

Philip said he was going out. He had an engagement with Margaret, and on his way to the boarding house he turned over in his mind what he should say to her. It had suddenly become clear to him that he could not trust Gentle's judgment beyond a certain point; also that Margaret's position about the bakeshops had been too strongly taken for it to have been original with her.

Margaret greeted her lover with happy animation.

"Tell me, did Gentle talk to you about those bakeshops?" asked Philip.

"Why—er"—

"Did he?"

"Yes," answered Margaret, "but—how strange you are!"

Philip brightened as his eyes rested on her. She was deliciously charming. He led her to the queer old lounge with its red rose pattern, and there they faced each other, half smiling, half serious.

But the growing difference that had sprung up between them insisted upon obtruding itself.

"Why were you so serious when you came in?" Margaret asked.

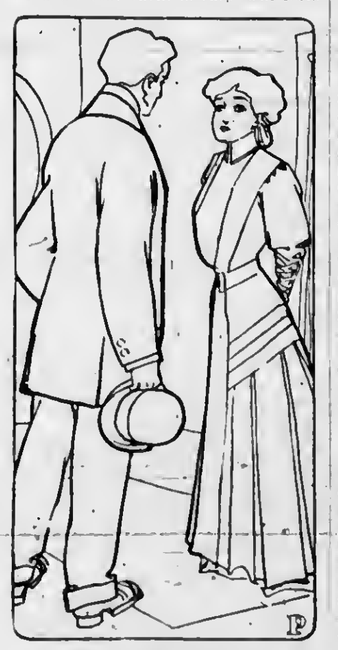
"We have made a mistake, dear, in one thing," he said, "and I—I know you'll be sensible about it."

"You mean about the plan to take more bakeshops into the combination?"

"Yes."

"You're not going to do it?"

"Listen, Margaret," he reasoned; "if we don't take them in they will form



"What I decide is the thing that shall be."

a combination against us. That is certain. So the same number of bakers will be discharged either way, and if we force them to oppose us we shall suffer serious loss in our business."

Margaret did not see. She had counted on Philip's influence against this cruel combination, and now he was thinking only of the money.

"But, Margaret," he insisted, "we must have money, and surely you want me to think about the future."

"Not if it means harming poor people."

Philip frowned.

"The men discharged will soon find other work. Besides, think of the good we are doing. We're working a regular revolution in breadmaking. You may say what you please about Mr. Jackson, but"—

"I hate him!" interrupted Margaret.

"Anyway he has changed these bakeshops so you would scarcely know them. He insists on absolute cleanliness—floors and walls must be scrubbed every day, windows must be kept open for proper ventilation, defective plumbing must be repaired, no sick man may be employed. It's a good thing. It may save hundreds of lives."

Margaret listened unconvinced.

"Don't do it, Philip," she begged. "Don't go into this new combination. Leave things as they are."

"But I explained that"—

"I know, only—Phil, you won't refuse me this—the first favor I have asked you!"

Philip hesitated.

"See here, Margaret, when a man and woman marry there are certain things that each one knows about, aren't there? A woman knows about the home and a man knows about business. And each must respect the other's judgment in those matters. Isn't that true?"

"Yes-es."

"Now, I'm the wage earner," he went on quickly. "I provide the money, and you must leave money matters to me."

Perhaps this was a decisive moment in Philip's life, the turning point where a last effort of hers might keep him right.

"I don't agree with you," she said. "I think a wife should know about her husband's work so that she can advise him and help him."

"The man must decide about business, and the woman must not interfere."

"Then," she murmured—"then you are not the Philip I thought you were."

"I'm sorry," he said.

"Philip," she said with a sudden dignity, "I ask you once more not to do this thing."

"And—and if I refuse it?" he asked unsteadily.

"You won't refuse—you can't refuse," she pleaded. And then, as she saw his face still cold, "If you should refuse, then—then, Phil, I should say that—that you had changed somehow and were not the noble, high minded man to whom I gave my love."

Philip's lips tightened.

"Margaret," he said in a low tone, "we seem to have made something serious out of a little thing. But, since we have done it, let me say this: I love you with all my heart. I have asked you to be my wife. I will work for you gladly and do everything in my power to make you happy, but you may as well understand now, once for all, that as a man I claim the right of deciding what shall be done at important moments. I may make mistakes, although I shall try to decide wisely; but, whether I make mistakes or not, what I decide is the thing that shall be."

A Turpentine Substitute.

German chemists have perfected a system of manufacturing turpentine substitutes by the distillation of heavy petroleum from Borneo at a cost of about one-third that of ordinary American turpentine. The new article is reported by Dr. Elbner of the Royal Technical high school in Munich to correspond sufficiently with the requirements of the modern substitute for turpentine oil in regard to boiling point, specific weight and flash. It secures the solubility of resin and products of resin, nearly coming up to American turpentine oil, so that the differences to manufacturers of varnishes are scarcely noticeable.

The sample examined, as compared with American turpentine oil, provides the same solubility for varnish extracts produced from copals, amber and resin and therefore is susceptible of replacing American turpentine oil in the manufacture of oil varnishes for industrial purposes.

Electric Treatment of Iron.

Electrolysis is being employed for the making of iron plates and tubes. Cast iron or iron ore is put into an acid bath and connected to the positive pole of a dynamo. For tubes the negative electrode is a wooden core covered with a sheet of lead, a similar flat surface being provided for plates. When the tube deposited by electrolysis has reached the desired thickness it is taken from the bath and is then heated to melt the lead and remove the core. The tubes and plates cost much less than those obtained by melting and rolling. The iron produced is superior in quality, and it is believed to be possible not only to utilize iron waste and inferior ore, but to apply the process direct to ore in its bed, thus making unnecessary the mining and cleaning of ore.

The Cause of Hiccoughs.

A man recently died in New York from hiccoughs, from which he suffered for six days, caused by a burn on his arm. According to the doctors, the burn caused a condition of "crossed wires" in the nervous system. A nerve in the arm and the phrenic nerve, which controls the diaphragm, start within a fraction of an inch of each other on the spinal cord. Physicians believe the injured arm nerve come in contact with the other, causing the spasms of the diaphragm that are known as hiccoughs. The hiccoughs began the day following the burn.

DISEASE OF LIP AND LEG IN SHEEP

About the time of the recent outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the east many urgent requests were sent to experts to examine certain herds of sheep in which it was feared foot and mouth disease had appeared.

This examination proved the disease was not the dreaded foot and mouth disease, but one which has become known as lip and leg ulceration. It is caused by a specific germ, is highly contagious and may be communicated to young pigs, colves and other animals.

As a result of the failure in dipping to destroy infection, the bureau now recommends the treatment of individual animals and reasonable detention of herds in which infected animals are found until all danger of further outbreak is over.

This treatment of individual animals is an almost endless task for sheep owners whose holdings aggregate tens of thousands of animals but at present it seems to be the only effective method of combating the disease.

Each infected sheep is caught, and the ulcerated spots are thoroughly disinfected with solutions of carbolic acid or other recognized disinfectant agents.

Where heavy scabs have formed and the ulcerations are deeply rooted it is necessary to thoroughly open up the sores so that the medicine gets to the seat of the trouble. Ulcers of long standing should be cauterized by an application of zinc nitrate or caustic potash.

A good many of the sheepmen have been inclined to doubt the contagious nature of this disease, claiming that the lesions were simply the result of minor infection, caused by wounds to the mouth from eating rough grasses and brush or from the pricks of cactus.

It is likely that these agencies are helpful in spreading the disease, since the small wounds made in this way furnish easy access to the germs of the disease. Mild cuts originating in this manner which are neglected are likely to develop into a more virulent form and spread, not only among the lambs, but may develop in range cattle. For these reasons various stringent quarantine measures are being enforced by both government and state officers in the hope of eradicating the disease at an early date.

Hog Jottings.

Movable hog houses have come to stay.

The cost of product is lessened by pushing the pigs for early maturity.

The danger of overfeeding in case of young pigs is always inimical to maximum results.

Do not overlook the importance of making a pig's food palatable from the beginning to the end of the season.

The possibility of expanding the production of pork is so great that we shall never see a scarcity of this product.

The loss of condition at weaning time may be greatly reduced if the pigs have been accustomed to supplementary foods.

Keep Hands Dry When Milking.

Milking with wet hands is a filthy practice. The clean milker uses clean hands and is sure before he begins that the cow's udder is clean and that no falling dirt can get into the milk. Using lard on the hands to make milking easy will aid in making hard milkers. It will also help to keep the cow's teats tender. Dampening the teats with milk also has the same effect.

THE VETERINARY

An Indigestion Remedy.

For a horse troubled with indigestion feed oats, bran and hay. Keep him off grass. Do not feed carrots or corn. Allow free access to rock salt. Reduce the grain ration one-third at first and increase as he does better. Give him half an ounce of Fowler's solution of arsenic night and morning. Work him lightly or exercise fully every day. He should have a box stall in stable.

To Do Away With Itching Skin.

When a mare is affected with itching skin clipping would be the best treatment. Then wash itchy parts with a one to fifty solution of coal tar dip as required. Stop feeding corn and linseed meal and continue oats, bran and hay.

Garget in the Cow.

If three-quarters of the udder in the cow do not give milk now they never will, and it would not pay to keep her for breeding purposes. She should be fattened for slaughter. She doubtless had an attack of garget or the duct of the teats were closed and garget resulted.

LOWERING COST OF ROAD BUILDING

Dragging a Means of Saving Millions of Dollars.

SOLVING THE MUD PROBLEM.

How Stretch of Roadway In Trenton, Mo., Deemed a Failure For Traffic After Rainstorms, Converted Into an Ideal Highway by Use of King's Simple Invention.

To overturn moss grown customs, to change the highway legislation of states, to revolutionize the roadmaking methods of the nation, to arrest the attention of the roadmakers of a continent, to improve the common earth roads to an immeasurable degree and at the same time save millions of dollars by reducing road building expenses, this is the province of the simple, cheap, uncouth, but efficient King drag. Little did I suspect when first I rode a drag down the highway that such claims would ever be made, says D. Ward King, the inventor.

The initial trip was taken in the spring of 1896, and the result was so pleasing and satisfactory that the work

HIGHWAY OF EARTH.
(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

has never lagged from then until now. The effect on the road was instantaneous. The passage of the drag wrought a wonderful change. Whereas the road had been very rough, with two deep ruts in evidence, after the drag had been used it was comparatively smooth, and the ruts, which before dragging stuck out like sore thumbs, were rendered unobtrusive and unobstructive. Before none but the hardiest adventurer dared drive out of the beaten track; afterward there was no need to choose a way, for all the surface was smoother than the best portion had been.

The stories told about the King drag and its work are preposterous. They are unreasonable and absurd, and yet they are absolutely true. But I ask no one to believe, for my only object in telling them is to shock the public into giving the new system a trial.

Here is one they are telling in Iowa. In Cedar county a gentleman riding in a spring wagon on a dragged road drove out on one side to allow a four horse wagon load of logs to go by him. The loaded logs went merrily on their way, but the spring wagon had to be dug out with a spade.

From over near Trenton, Mo., comes another. It seems that some years ago a stretch of creek bottom road habitually overflowed after every heavy rain. It regularly became a mass of mud and water. The community declared that it was a physical impossibility to fill in enough earth to build a roadway, and the authorities were planning to condemn land for a new road a quarter of a mile away from the creek. At this moment somebody suggested a test, with a King drag. Although the creek still covers the roadway during each freshet, there has been no serious difficulty with that road since the test began.

To the man who drives a team the word gumbo means broken doubletrees, horses mired down and other bad road calamities. A quarter of a mile of this sort of gumbo lies between my home and the railway station at Maitland. One morning when I boarded the train at Villisca, Ia., on my return from a lecture trip the trainmen said in response to my inquiry for news from down the road: "Well, sir, they had a terrible storm at Maitland last evening. When we stopped there the rain was falling in sheets. One could hardly see the depot." The train arrived at Maitland, and I stepped into my buggy and drove home over the gumbo quarter. I could see by the debris on the fence wires, still dripping wet, that water had stood three or four feet deep on the road during the night, yet there was not a puddle on its surface, and we traveled its length without the buggy wheels throwing any mud.

Another season the floods covered this same gumbo quarter with water and kept it standing there for more than a week, the road being traveled every day. I appealed to the highway authorities to erect a barricade, for I felt a personal pride in that road, and the prospect of its destruction gave me great mental pain. But the authorities said they were powerless because they could stop public travel only when traveling became dangerous to the public, so they did nothing. At the end of the week the water receded and this King dragged gumbo boulevard emerged from its seven day baptism absolutely unharmed.

WILL GET BETTER ROADS.

Resort Men In Monroe County to Provide Highways For Motorists.

An important meeting of proprietors of hotels of the resorts throughout the county was held at Stroudsburg, Pa., recently, at which it was decided to boom the region as it has never been boomed before. The manner in which this is to be accomplished is by the generous use of printer's ink in the newspapers of the great cities. These men realize that in order to keep the resorts promulgenly to the fore this move is necessary, and the manner in which all the members responded to the calls for subscriptions is the very best evidence that they are heart and soul in the proposition to make 1910 the banner season.

At the meeting another matter of much importance was taken up and discussed—the question of good roads. This is not a new subject, but it was given a new impetus by the action of the resort men, who directed A. B. Williams, the president of the Monroe County Resort association, to appoint a committee to confer and lay plans to greatly improve the roads in the county. It is especially important at this time because of the fact that the Scranton Automobile club is interested in the improvements in the roads of this section of the county. In fact, the Scranton club has taken a step to assist in bringing about the improvement by material aid to rebuild the road traversing the Paradise section of the county.

The club wants the assistance of the people of the region in the proposition, and this it is assured of receiving. The committee to be appointed by Mr. Williams is to work in the interest of the movement, which will be appreciated by the visitors to the county and the motoring fraternity, who come here in such great numbers, being attracted by the beauties of the county.

The action of the association to improve road conditions has created more interest in the season about to open, the resort men being of the opinion that if the plans of the committee are successful the region will become still more popular and in consequence will attract many more people to this section.

When the season of 1910 opens everything will be found to be in readiness for the proper accommodation of visitors, who take so much pleasure in staying within the borders of the county to while away the heated season. With good roads, which are assured, and a proper publicity campaign the people believe that all records will be eclipsed.

GOOD ROADS CAMPAIGN.

Highway Commission Reappointed In Ventura, Cal.

The supervisors in preparation for proposed bond issues in Ventura, Cal., have reappointed as county commissioners Messrs. Clark, Edmundson and Fleisher. This commission was appointed two years ago and went thoroughly into the question of good roads throughout the county, furnishing specifications and an estimate.

But the financial depression came on, work was dropped and the commission discharged. Since then agitation has been started for a renewal, and a proposition has been set on foot to bond the county for $1,000,000 for good roads and a number of bridges. The commission is empowered to again retain Surveyor Wand at a salary of not to exceed $400 per month.

The matter of a choice of a courthouse site in Ventura has been selected by the supervisors. Citizens have raised a purse of $20,000 with which to buy a site, the location being left to the supervisors. Two sites have already been offered.

A Stage Name.

There is a story, well known to theatrical folk, of how Ada Rehan, the actress, whose name was Ada Crehan, came to adopt the stage name of Rehan. Mr. Daly, tradition relates, was opposed to middle initials of his actors and actresses being printed in advertisements and programs. Just before Miss Rehan's appearance as a Daly recruit Mr. Daly was looking over some proofs of programs. His eye lit on "Ada C. Rehan," a compositor's error. He struck out the "C," and Rehan her name remained.

VOL. 28. NUMBER 27 | CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, JULY 6, 1910 | PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

PURPOSE OF THE ORGANIZATION

Known as the Straits of Mackinac Apple Belt Association

EXPLAINED BY SECRETARY WARD

In Letter Which He is Sending Out to the Growers

Hope to Secure Uniform Picking, Grading and Marketing of Our Superior Fruit Which Means Better Prices.

At a meeting of fruit growers, held at Mackinaw City, May 23, an organization was perfected under the name of the Straits of Mackinaw Apple Belt Association, the purpose of which is to advance the interests of the apple growers of the five northern counties bordering on Lakes Michigan and Huron.

We have our apple growers' associations that are caring for the interests of the producer in the way of teaching him to plant, cultivate and spray his fruit properly. These are county organizations and we now have perfected an organization that will work in co-operation with those and cover a larger territory, for the purpose of securing uniform packages, rules for grading and marketing the products of the orchards in this part.

Michigan is acknowledged to be one of the best fruit producing statef in the union, but through the carelessness of our shippers we have been dumping on the market fruit without regard to the quality of the same, and the result is that while Michigan fruit is acknowledged to have a flavor superior to a western apple, yet the buyer is afraid to purchase because he does not know what the barrel may contain.

Our purpose is to adopt a label which shall be copyrighted, that can be used only by the members of the association. Every package of fruit going out under this label will be guaranteed to come up to the standard of western shippers and we expect to be able to get the same price that they do.

During the past season apples were selling in the orchards at from $1.50 to $1.80 per barrel, while Hood River apples were bringing the same prices per box of one bushel, and packing and marketing were responsible for the discrepancy in the price.

I am sending you this letter to acquaint you with the fact of our having formed this organization and to ask you to co-operate with us in making it a success. Regular application blanks and copy of our by-laws will be sent you a little later in the season and we shall ask your co-operation in making this organization so strong that we may be able to build up a market for ourselves without any reference to the balance of Michigan.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

Next Monday evening the annual school meeting will be held and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance of patrons of the schools, as perhaps no more important public meeting is held than the annual school meeting.

No city in the state has better schools than Charlevoix, their high standard being recognized in all the higher institutions of learning, and their graduates have made good in all walks of life, and have brought credit to their school. The past year has been one of the most successful in the history of the schools, everybody working together to make it a harmonious year and next Monday night it is hoped plans will be laid for a still more successful year.

ALFALFA GROWING

A Very Successful Crop in Western Michigan

Best Known Forage Crop for all Kinds of Live Stock.

What has been done by Mr. Gerber of Newaygo county in the matter of raising alfalfa will be duplicated in every county in western Michigan, when our farmers realize that an acre of good alfalfa produces twice as much digestible nutriment and twice as much bulk as an acre of red clover. It is the most profitable food crop a farmer can raise and will net him from $35 to $50 per acre per year.

Alfalfa can be grown on a variety of soils, the most favorable being a gravelly loam with a porous subsoil. There must be drainage fertility, lime and inoculation. Alfalfa cannot be grown on sour land. Time and seed will be thrown away on land where sorrel grows. In the fall plow in barnyard manure. Begin cultivating as early as possible in the spring and continue until planting time in order to kill out all weeds. If you haven't a limy soil, apply lime at the rate of two thousand pounds per acre. Do not apply lime and manure at the same time. Do not plow the lime under because if you do, it does not become available for the young plants when they first come up and besides the lime leaches out sooner than if put on the surface of the ground.

From the 25th day of May to the 10th of June is the best time to sow alfalfa in Western Michigan. It may be sown as late as the middle of August, but you are more certain of getting a crop the first year from the early sowing. Use from twelve to twenty pounds of seed to the acre. Light soil requires more seed than clay or rich loam. Sow half the seed one way and the other half the other way of the field After sowing the seed and dragging it in, sow broadcast on the land not less than 500 pounds to the acre, of dirt from an old alfalfa field and drag it in thoroughly. This dirt will inoculate the soil with the nitrogen producing bacteria so necessary to the successful growth of alfalfa. The soil on which sweet clover has grown will also inoculate the soil. The inoculating dirt should be spread either on a cloudy day or late in the afternoon to prevent the sun from killing the bacteria.

Alfalfa is the best known forage for cattle. Hogs, sheep, horses and fowls thrive on it.

The Department of agriculture at Washington states in its Bulletin No. 339 that when good well cured alfalfa hay is worth $14 per ton, the feeding value of other feeds is about as follows: well cured clover hay, per ton $10; well cured timothy hay, $7; wheat bran, $16; shelled corn $11. Thus it is shown by the most competent authority that the feeding value of alfalfa hay is about equivalent to that of corn meal or wheat bran.

We would recommend anyone who wishes to know more about this subject to write to Mr. Bruce Odell of Cadillac, Michigan, who is an authority on alfalfa raising, having specialized on it for a number of years.

IS BIG COMPANY

Details of Organization of the New Merger

Of Lake Superior Iron & Chemical Company—Boyne City Interested.

A dispatch from Detroit says of the big merger that has taken over the iron furnace in Boyne City:

Western Michigan and the upper peninsula are concerned in what is probably the largest trust company operation in Michigan in connection with estate management.

The Union Trust company has just closed a $10,000,000 deal involving the sale of the old Lake Superior Iron & Chemical company, incorporated under New York laws.

There is much interest in inner financial and corporation circles over the probability that back of the transaction stands the Standard Oil group for heading the list of directors of the new Lake Superior Iron & Chemical company is E. M. Harrison, president of the United States Industrial Alcohol company, a large Standard Oil subsidiary, and the understood-name purpose of the new corporation is to develope the output of wood of industrial alcohol and of acetate of lime.

The properties transferred consist of six charcoal pig iron furnaces, with some chemical and charcoal plants at Manistique, Mich.; Newberry, Mich.; Boyne City, Mich.; Elk Rapids, Mich.; Choclay, Mich.; and Ashland, Wis. Plants at a number of these places will soon be rebuilt or remodeled. An entirely new plant is to be built at Choclay.

An inventory of the properties, made by experts in their several lines gives the total values of $8,358,903. The company has set aside $1,000,000 to rebuild and remodel the charcoal plants at Ashland, Manistique, Newberry and Elk Rapids. Modern methods have made the kiln method obsolete, owing to the alcohol and acetate of lime waste, hence new retort plants.

It is estimated that the new and remodeled plants will have an annual output of 198,000 tons of charcoal; pig iron at a profit of $3.50 per pound or $693,000; 3,430,000 gallons of wood alcohol, at 23c per gallon for it, or $789,900; 61,500,000 pounds of acetate of lime at 1½c per pound, or $1,845,000; operations of Yale iron ore mine, $75,000; estimated net annual earnings, after all allowances, at $1,383,420.

In addition to the properties acquired from the old company, the new company is acquiring 130,581 acres of hardwood forest land in fee; cordwood stumpage contracts covering 140,018 acres from which the cordwood has not been removed, giving a total of hardwood supply from 301,500 acres. The new company is also acquiring railroad branches and spurs aggregating 35 miles, and a lease to the Yale mine in Bessemer, Mich., in which 350,000 tons of ore are blocked out.

The capitalization is in the total sum of $10,000,000, which $8,485,000 is in common and $1,525,000 in preferred stock. The authorized bond issue is $10,000,000, but at present $6,500,000 held in the treasury for future requirements.

Officers will be as follows: President, John Joyce, Boston; vice president and general manager, W. H. Mathews, general manager of the Boyne City Chemical Co., Boyne City, Mich.; secretary, L. F. Knowles, Boyne City, Mich.; treasurer to be named by Dominion Iron & Steel Co. interests.

Mr. Mathews and Mr. Knowles will make their residence in Detroit, where the general business offices will be maintained.

NEW MOTOR BOAT LAWS

Which Go Into Effect Next Saturday.

When All Vessels Must Have the Equipment.

The custom officers within the past week received the new motor boat laws and we are herewith giving a synopsis of them. All motor boats are divided into classes as follows: Class 1, anything under 26 ft. in length; Class 2, those of 26 to 40 ft. in length; Class 3, 40 to 65 ft. in length.

Class 2 shall carry the white light aft, and also a white headlight, as near the stern as possible showing an arc of 20 points of the compass, that is straight ahead and 2 points abaft the beam on either side. They shall also carry the red port light in screen 18 inches long. The glass or lense of the headlight shall not be less than 19 squre inches.

Class 3 is the same as class 2 excepting that the white headlight shall have a glass with 31 inches of surfaces and sidelights of not less than 25 square inches, and the screens must be 24 inches in length. After July 1st 1911, all the lights in boats of classes 2 and 3 must have frosted or fluted glass.

Every motor boat must have a whistle or sound producing appliance which is capable of producing a blast of two seconds duration. In addition to this an efficient fog horn must be carried on classes 2 and 3.

Boats in class 2 shall carry an efficient bell, but no size is specified. Class 3 must have at least an 8 inch bell. Nothing is said about a bell in the first class.

Every motor boat must carry life preservers, life belts, ring buoys or buoyant cushions sufficient to sustain afloat every person on board. Where devices other than the regulation preserver are used they must be submitted to local inspectors. Boats carrying passengers for hire must carry the regulation life preserver and be in charge of a licensed person. The law provides that the preservers shall be so placed as to be readily accessible.

Section 6 provides that every boat and also every vessel propelled by machinery other than steam, more than 65 feet in length, shall carry ready for immediate use the means of promptly and effectually extinguishing burning gasoline.

The above laws go into effect on July 9th, 1910, and vessels must be equipped by that date.

GIBSON'S BOOSTER POEM

Which he Recited at Meeting of the Development Bureau.

The following was recited by John I. Gibson, secretary of the West Michigan Development Bureau, at the meeting held at East Jordan and Boyne City last week. Mr. Gibson is a past master at boosting.

BE A BOOSTER

There's a lot of foolish people
Sittin' round in every town,
Growlin' like a bloody chicken,
Knockin' every good thing down.
Don't you be that kind of cattle,
'Cause they are no use on earth;
You just be a booster rooster—
Crow and boost for all you're worth.
If your town needs boostin', boost 'er
Don't hold back and wait to see
If some other fellow's willin'
Sail right in the country's free;
No one's got a mortgage on it,
It's yours just as much as his;
If your town is shy on boosters
You get in the boostin' biz.
If things don't just seem to suit you
An' the world seems kinder wrong,
What's the matter with a boostin'
Just to help the thing along.
'Cause if things should stop a going
We'd be in a sorry plight
You just keep that horn a blowin'
Boost 'er up with all your might.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 72 years old and so strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to put men and women who are prematurely old, broken down, nervous, weak, discouraged, etc., on the road to health and happiness. I have been a great many disappointed men they thought in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and book of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In fact, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood or nervousness, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE. Send a self-addressed envelope (no) you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will think my every day in your life after having tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW, before it is too late. Address me personally.

Although the weather was very dry and extremely hot there were two little fellows who braved it through till the last. The names are Tommy Cubic and Charley Vought, the later being only nine years old and had never been away from home before. He often became homesick yet he was faithful to the end. A TIMELESS WORLD.

What Would Happen if We Were Entirely Inclosed by Clouds.

If astronomers are right in ascribing the wonderful brightness of Venus to the existence of an atmosphere continually filled with clouds, then she must be a world without time—at least there can be no measurement of time there such as we have here.

It is because we can see the sun and the stars that we are able to traverse the oceans and run railroad trains across the continents.

Surround our earth with an unbroken shell of clouds and what would become of all our clocks and chronometers? Not a ship could safely cross the sea; not a railroad would be able to run its trains without a series of frightful wrecks. In a few weeks every clock and watch would be hopelessly wrong and all exact timekeeping would cease.

Probably there are few who stop to think of the way in which our everyday life depends upon astronomical observations. Our great primary timekeeper is the earth rotating on its axis. If we could not see the sun and stars because of clouds we should not know that the earth rotates and there would be no standard to which we could refer our timepieces and by which we could correct them. In fact, we should probably have no timepieces.

There could be no hours and minutes, for they are exact divisions of an ideal day based upon celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

They could not be based upon clocks or other mechanical devices, because the most exquisite chronometer that can be constructed will not keep time indefinitely and must be continually corrected by means of observations of the stars made in the observatories.

There could be no accurate maps of countries or charts of the seas, for such maps and charts can be made only by the aid of astronomical observations.

There could be no parallels of latitude or meridians of longitude, for they, too, are based on celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

We should not know with any certainty where we were upon the earth. We could not measure the distance from New York to London nor from New York to San Francisco.

Poetical minds, moved by the spectacle of Venus in her glory, have drawn brilliant pictures of the delights of life in that radiant world, but there is another side to the question of which we may well think as we gaze admiringly upon her electric splendor.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

The "Arabian Nights."

The collection of tales called the "Thousand and One Nights," or the "Arabian Nights," is of unknown date and authorship. It was first made known in Europe about the end of the seventeenth century by Antoine Galland, who was employed by Colbert to collect manuscripts in the east. The copy of the Arabic manuscript brought by Galland from Syria contained a marginal note dated 1781, and from internal evidence the middle of the fifteenth century has been fixed upon as the probable period of the composition of the work. Some of the tales were evidently borrowed by the writer from other authors, and Von Hammer identifies at least the first and some of the stories of the "Arabian Nights" with an earlier collection in Persian called the "Thousand Fanciful Stories."

April Fooling.

The origin of the custom of April fooling cannot be traced with any degree of certainty. In the literature of the last century there are found many references to it, and yet beyond that it is scarcely possible to go. One suggestion is that the custom of playing tricks on the first day of April was derived from some ancient pagan custom, such as the Hilarios or the Roman feast of the fools. One fact, however, we do know, and that is that the practice prevails in many countries under various names which would seem to indicate that it dates away back to the early history of the race.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Four Extremes.

The coldest place on earth inhabited by man is Verkhoyansk, above the arctic circle, in northeastern Siberia. The thermometer there drops to 90 degrees below zero in January, but sometimes rises to 86 degrees above zero in the shade in July, dropping, however, to the freezing point on the warmest summer nights. The hottest place in the world is the interior of the great Sahara desert, in Africa, where the thermometer rises to 122 degrees. The wettest place is Greytown, Nicaragua, where the mean annual rainfall is 260 inches. The place of least rain is Port Nolloth, in South Africa, where less than an inch sometimes falls in a year.

All For Love.

"Did you ever know a girl to die for love?"

"Yes."

"Did she just fade away and die because some man deserted her?"

"No; she just took in washing and worked herself to death because the man she loved married her."—Houston Post.

A Cruel Hint.

The back aches at times with a dull, indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back in this condition. You cannot reach the cause. Exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one. Charlevoix residents would do well to profit by the following example:

Mrs. C. E. Clapp, 107 Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: I can strongly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, having used them with the best of results. Last spring I had a severe attack of kidney trouble and I was made miserable by dull, nagging backaches. My kidneys pained me and there were other symptoms of kidney trouble in evidence. Doan's Kidney Pills did me a world of good, relieving my aches and pains and strengthening my kidneys, in fact, making a general improvement. CHAPTER XVI.

MORAN FINDS JENNY.

THE Moran apartment had undergone still another change. It was no ollive now, brilliantly lighted, for Haggleton's suggestion that the two windows facing the East river should be joined into one large observation window had been carried out. Jenny's little room had been turned into a "private office." The hall door had been removed to make place for one of ground glass, on which was painted in large black letters, "East Side Associated Bakeshops." The flat across the hall had been rented for living purposes.

Joe Caffrey had learned typewriting with gratifying celerity and turned out to be a most satisfactory speller. Moran alone remained unreconciled, watching with growing hostility the phenomenal rise of this man Jackson.

Jenny's disappearance had been a terrible blow to Moran. He had no delusion about the life to which she had returned and in his unreasoning hostility to society ascribed this, too, to the curse of capitalism. Philip, too, worried a great deal over Jenny.

* * * * * * *

One afternoon Moran, simply but neatly dressed, was working at his desk, and grumbling at his work, as was his wont. Joe, seated at the typewriter, was ticking out letters.

"Say, Moran," he observed, "what's the use of being a kicker?"

"I'd rather be a kicker than a quitter," was the significant answer.

"Meaning me?"

"Yes, you. You used to call yourself a Socialist. Yah!"

"That was when I was broke. I wanted to divide. Now I've got something, and, say—no dividing for me!

"Hello," Joe exclaimed as he glanced at the morning paper, "here is my old friend Haggleton again! His yacht has passed Gibraltar."

"Curse him!" growled Moran. "I hate him!"

"Ah, shut off the hot air! What has John J. ever done to you?"

Moran wheeled around.

"What has he done to me?" he snarled. "He ruined my little business out west and made me a common laborer. He killed my wife in his rotten tenement with consumption, he killed Jenny's husband with his railroads, and he has sent Jenny out into the"—

"You make me tired, Moran. If a man has the colic in this tenement they blame it on Haggleton."

Haggleton entered, followed by Gentle.

The head of the east side bakery trust sat down at his desk, saying to Gentle:

"I will be with you in a moment. Go into the private office."

True to his resolution, the old diver now kept in daily touch with Haggleton and his son. The millionaire understood his motive perfectly, but never betrayed the slightest impatience or irritation.

Haggleton glanced at the morning paper.

"Hello," he said, "another model tenement fails to pay expenses! Tenants store their coal in the porcelain bathtubs. Here, Joe, show that to Mr. Gentle. No; wait. I'll do it myself."

He disappeared.

Moran closed his ledger, opened one of the drawers of his desk and took from it a revolver. Joe, looking over his shoulder, was taken aback.

"What have you got that gun for?" persisted Joe.

"Nothing."

Moran put the pistol back into the drawer.

"You have been playing with that gun for years, Moran," said Joe. "What's the use? You would never dare to use it. You are a milk and water anarchist. Why don't you get a bunch of firecrackers? They make more noise for less money."

"I am a fool," Moran announced gloomily. "I had no business to take this job."

"Well, then, why did you take it?"

"I was out of work. I wanted to help Jenny. Never mind what she has been. She is my daughter. She's all I have got, and now she's gone. I have lost her."

Two tears rolled slowly down his flabby cheeks.

Joe was touched. He felt sincerely sorry, but, after the manner of his kind, ashamed of this "softness." So he replied airily:

"Jenny will turn up all right."

Despair distorted the old man's features.

"Where will she turn up?" he asked, in an agony of apprehension. "What is she doing now?"

"You've got a rank philosophy!" ejaculated Joe. "Whatever is is wrong. That's the way you dope it out. Say, you'd better get busy and mail those letters Mr. Jackson has signed or you'll lose this job you are so ashamed of."

Moran obediently put on his coat and hat, took up a pile of correspondence which Joe had meanwhile stamped with lightning rapidity and walked toward the door.

Joe returned to his typewriting.

Moran, however, having reached the door, stopped, hesitated and turned back. He approached Joe's desk, leaned over it and looked him straight in the eyes. The grim determination of his face daunted Joe a little.

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

"Here, you," said the old man sternly, "I want to know something, and I mean to find out. Where is Jenny?"

Joe shifted his eyes from Moran's face to the wall behind it and wriggled uneasily in his chair.

"Why—er"— he stammered.

"Answer my question," said the other man, with ominous calm.

"I don't know, Moran."

"I believe you are lying. You know where she is and what she is. Mark my words, I will find that girl! I will find her, I tell you!"

He continued to look at Joe in silence, with a new determination in his watery, wavering eyes. His flabby mouth was drawn in a tight line. Joe was startled again, but again mastered himself. He looked back boldly, steadfastly, resolved to keep to himself what he knew.

Moran's next action startled him still more. The old man took his keys out of his pocket, unlocked the drawer, took from it the revolver and slipped it into the pocket of his overcoat.

Then he left the office without a further word.

Joe got up and walked up and down. He was now deeply disturbed, far more so than he would admit even to himself. This sudden demonstration of fitfulness by the flabby, vacillating, mouthing Moran—well, he did not like it. No man is so dangerous, he knew, as a coward with a gun when he screws his cowardice up to the sticking point.

For whom was that revolver meant?

He cast about in his mind, but could settle on no particular person. Moran's hatreds were so all inclusive, social and economic in the aggregate rather than particular.

Of course John J. Haggleton was to Moran the incarnation of all the evils of society, including the evil whose victim Jenny was. But then John J. was away on his yacht for a three months' cruise, and Moran could not reach him with a pistol across the Atlantic ocean at Gibraltar.

There were the police and the police justices on their benches and the settlement workers, whose social superiority Moran detested. He hated the czar of Russia and the president of the republic. He did not like Jackson. He merely tolerated Gentle. He had begun to sneer at Philip and his sudden business activity. He was rude to Margaret Lawrence. Jenny alone he loved.

Perhaps he hated Joe himself. He thought of the pistol again. It might be turned against himself. Joe stopped in his walk.

He remembered what he had heard the leader of the gang he had deserted in time say upon one occasion: "When a man threatens you with a gun, shoot first, and do it quick. But if you're unarmed grab hold of his windpipe and squeeze. No man who feels the life being strangled out of him ever has presence of mind enough left to shoot. Instinct tells him to tear those hands away from his throat—to get air, to breathe. He'll drop his gun to do it before he'll die."

Joe became calmer. He lighted a cigarette. After all, what was he thinking about? Such nonsense! He dismissed the subject from his mind.

"He's an awful bluff," he said, half aloud. "He's a mild anarchist! He couldn't blow up a red balloon!"

* * * * * * *

Moran had left the office a little before 5 in the afternoon. He stood a moment trying to decide what to do. It was no use to return to the office in his present state of mind, he concluded. Moreover, they would close in an hour. He entered a saloon and had a drink, then took another and still another with a couple of men who, he discovered, were fomenting trouble among the hands of the bakery combine.

He mechanically ate of the "free lunch" and emerged at 9 o'clock to take up his hunt for his daughter.

He walked the Bowery from Chinatown to the Bible House, back and forth. A fine drizzle was falling, but he did not feel it. He was thinking of Jenny. If he could only find her!

It was after 10 when he turned into Doyers street, where evil looking Chinamen were skulking under dark doorways. He recognized the smell of burning opium. He heard the harsh tomtom in the Chinese theater, and from the Doyers street mission just beyond came the fragment of a gospel hymn:

O depths of mercy! Can it be
That gate was left ajar for me?

For a moment he stood irresolute, almost ready to go in and throw himself on his knees and pray for help. If he could only find her!

He turned into a narrow street. They were making repairs here, and he sat down on the iron elbow of a sewer pipe. He sat in the rain and thought in a dull way for a long time. A woman approached.

"Feelin' blue, ain't ye? Same here," she said.

"What's the matter?"

"I'm all broke up," she said. "I'm takin' too much dope. Fifty pills a day is too much, ain't it? The missionary doctor says I can't live six months if I don't cut it out."

"Do you know Jenny Moran?"

"Jenny Moran? Sure! She ain't here. She's a good looker. She stayed down here one day. If you want to find her you must go uptown."

Moran rose. Within twenty minutes he was walking along Sixth avenue in the neighborhood of several second rate music halls. He entered one and sat down at a table.

Suddenly he heard a voice behind him exclaim "Father!" and, looking up, he saw Jenny. She wore a large black hat with white ostrich plumes and a tan coat lined with silk.

She followed him without a word, pale and trembling, into the street, across town and into a Fourth avenue car. Not a word passed between them. They sat side by side, her hand hiding the tears rolling unchecked down her cheeks, his face grim, a baleful light in his eyes.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE BATTLE IS ON.

THE offices of the East Side Associated Bakeshops had not closed that evening at the customary hour, however. The threatened strike had suddenly assumed startling proportions.

Haggleton secretly welcomed the trouble with the hands in the bakeshops. What he foresaw came to pass. Philip, face to face with the poor in his new position as a business man, suddenly discovered their unreasonableness, their lack of foresight, their selfishness, which could not calculate future benefits, their disregard of the good of the factory.

Without realizing it he ranged himself that evening on the side of capital.

So he stayed on alone in the office, waiting for news, watching the telephone. Haggleton and Gentle returned, the former stopping a moment to ask for news, then went across the hall to the other apartment.

At 9 o'clock Margaret suddenly appeared. Philip clasped her tumultuously.

He kissed her fondly again and again.

"Give me your left hand, so!" he asked. "Now close your eyes."

She obeyed, with a smile. Philip took from his waistcoat pocket an engagement ring and slipped it on her finger.

"Now look," he commanded.

Margaret gave a little cry of glad surprise.

She kissed the ring, then held up her lips to him.

Suddenly he heard a voice beside him exclaim "Father!"

They stood again a moment in blissful silence, but not for long. Margaret had come on a serious mission. She disengaged herself.

"Oh, Phil," she said pitifully, "I came to tell you about— You remember Emmy and Benny, the little children we sent to the hospital?"

"I know, dear. Their father hurt his hand the other day."

"Hurt his hand! It was crushed in your kneading machine, and now it has been amputated."

"It is his own fault. He was careless."

"His children were left unprovided for," continued Margaret, looking at him reproachfully, "and now—little Benny is dead."

Philip looked concerned.

The telephone bell rang sharply, and he sprang up and ran to the instrument.

Margaret saw, with a pang, that little Benny and his maimed father were immediately forgotten. This was business! Her heart sank as she listened to her lover's side of the brisk conversation over the phone:

"Hello. The Wisconsin flour mills? Yes, this is the East Side Associated Bakeshops. What's that? Oh, that's all right; we have the strike pretty well in hand. Yes, the bills will be promptly met. No, no, Mr. Williams, we are taking fifty carloads a week now, and there's a Minneapolis concern that will do better by us. Yes, that's right; that's what we ask, 20 per cent off. I didn't catch what you said. Yes, I know that we must be making money; that's what we are here for. Oh, no, it's 20 off or nothing doing. All right. Goodby."

He turned to Margaret.

"Phil, have you not noticed that I have been worried and unhappy lately?" she asked.

"Yes, I have, dear."

"It is what you said to me the other evening about business being the man's province, not the woman's. It is because I have seen you become entirely absorbed in business schemes and money making. Phil, you are forgetting your beautiful ideals."

The young man looked at her.

"It's true," he said at last thoughtfully. "Mr. Jackson has had an influence over me. It is as if he had waked up something in me that I did not know was there."

"Oh, Phil!" cried Margaret in dismay.

"I have forgotten my ideals, yes," continued Philip. "But I have not forgotten them. I have come to see that money is needed to carry them out. Money is needed to make you happy."

"I don't want money."

"Well, Pshaw." He spoke with decision. "And I am going to have it. And that means an active business life for me."

"You have decided all this without telling me?" she asked.

"I am telling you now, dear. We can talk it over together."

"Phil," she said, "there's something that must be done at once before we settle this. I promised Emmy that I would see about little Benny's funeral. Will you come with me?"

She rose.

Phil, too, got up.

"Why—er—I don't see how I can," he replied, hesitating. "I'll gladly give CHASE S. OSBORN recently gave out the following at Owosso.

"While I sincerely believe," said Mr. Osborn, "that many of those who are discussing the question of taxation, especially with reference to increasing the mine values and taxation on them are earnest in their opinions, that primarily the question has been raised by those who are interested in creating sectional feeling between different parts of the state for political effect. There is not an honest citizen who does not believe in the adequate taxation of all the property of the state, regardless of where it is situated or what it is.

"The proposition to make a revision of values is not a new one. This is provided for under the law. The revaluation of all property is made mandatory under the law, every five years, and a new valuation under this provision will be made next year, and would have been made an issue of this campaign or not.

"I earnestly desire to state that the mines and other properties of the upper peninsula should pay their just share of taxation, as well as other property of the state. The mining regions of the upper peninsula are 200 miles from my residence and the section in which I live is under no more mining influence or domination than Wayne county or Shiawassee county. If this question of taxation, which is as old as society, is raised as an issue for the purpose of obscuring more important questions, then it is unworthy of being given a first place in the minds of the people at this critical time. A great question of this campaign, it seems to me, is as to whether the money raised by taxation shall be honestly expended for efficient government or whether the state funds shall be wasted among political gratters or hangers-on, many of whom are only interested in holding their own jobs and who would not be given a position in private occupation in any of the legitimate activities of the state.

"It seems to me that the thing that is most demanded in Michigan today is that the state shall be put back into a condition of public integrity by an efficient administration. Until this is done and until men of honest character and capacity occupy the public places there can be no assurance that an intelligent and honest revaluation of the property of the state can be made, or that moneys raised by taxation will be properly expended, or that any of those things that the people most hope for will be accomplished.

"A great many departments of the state are at present hampered by a needless number of inefficient employes. Any good executive should be able to reduce the expenses of many of these departments at least one-half, and at the same time increase the department's efficiency. The state has been republican so long that men who have no higher ambition than to obtain public place for what they can get from it, have drifted into the party from all sides by wholesale. This has reduced the standing of the party and its character and efficiency. In other words, the party, which is as good today in its passive personnel as ever before, has become so careless as to permit the worst elements in it to dominate by reason of their greater activity.

"Mr. Osborn, have you personal knowledge at this time whether or not the mines of the upper peninsula are adequately taxed?"

"I have not, and I don't think any one else knows."

"How can this knowledge be arrived at?"

"It can be obtained the same as the work of a special expert commission, having knowledge of every phase of mining, appointed for the purpose."

"By revaluation?"

"No, by valuation, because there never has been a complete valuation made. This can be done as accurately by experts as the valuation of any other property can be estimated. I think a three commission of three could do the work."

"Appointed by the governor?"

"Appointed by the governor or legislature, or elected. Its creation, of course, would be a legislative function."

"Would you elected governor, and there seemed a statewide demand for this commission for the revaluation of mines pled, would you self to bring it into existence?"

"As I have said, it is a legislative function, but I would be glad to lend my influence and do all in my power to help toward its creation."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for testimonials.

THE TALE OF AN ARTIST.

A Case Where It Was More Reliable Than a Sailor's Optic.

Mr. N. Chevalier, the well known artist who accompanied the late Duke of Edinburgh on many of his travels, was once going from Dunedin to Lyttelton, New Zealand, by steamer. Anxious to catch the earliest glimpse of the coast, he went on deck at dawn and was alarmed to see that the vessel was heading straight on to the land. Calling the officer's attention to the fact, he was told that it was only a fog bank. The artist maintained his point, but the second officer looked and confirmed his mate.

The artist then said, "Well, gentlemen, I will back my artist's eye against your sailor's eye, and I say that what you mistake for a fog bank is a low range of hills, and there is a range of mountains appearing above them."

But he was only laughed at until the captain, coming on deck, found in the growing light that the artist was right and the seamen wrong. The vessel was out of its course, and there was only just time to avert disaster. The helmsman was dismissed in disgrace and the course given to a new steersman, but the vessel's head still pointed landward—the compass was all wrong.

The cause was discovered later. A commercial traveler had brought a box of magnets on board and deposited them in a stern cabin, causing what might have been a fatal deflection of the compass.

To return to the question of interpretation the artist was dealing with the appearances which his eye was trained to see and his mind to interpret. A speck on the horizon might have remained a mere speck to him long after the sailors had interpreted the speck into a vessel of definite rig. There can be little doubt that the trained eye is accompanied by a sort of mental seeing—an instinct outrunning optics.

FRIENDLY ADVICE.

Josh Billings' Parting Shot to a Cheeky Drummer.

About Christmas time once the sometime famous Josh Billings, humorist, was on his way to his old home at Lanesboro, Mass. On the train were three traveling men who wanted a game of whist. One of them pointed to unpretentious and unprepossessing Josh and said:

"Let's ask Rube into the game and comb some of the hayseed out of his hair."

"My venerable friend," he said as he laid his hand on the shoulder of the old man, "will you join us in a game of whist?"

"Ya-as; we will get there in abaout three hours," replied Josh, putting his hand to his ear.

"You don't seem to understand," said the young fellow in a louder tone. "We want you to take a hand."

"Ya-as; the stand o' corn has been unusual good this year."

"My friend," the young fellow then yelled, "will you take a hand in a game?"

"Ya-as; I was tellin' Mandy this mornin' how plenty an' how fat the game is this year."

"Oh, you go to the devil!" shouted the young fellow as he took his seat, while the other drummers unmercifully pestered him.

When Lanesboro was reached the old fellow got up, handed one of his Josh Billings cards to each one of the trio and then said to his interlocutor:

"Young man, while you are traveling on your check don't get any hayseed on your clothes or the other drummers will take you for a Rube and get you into some game and skin you."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

What Bothered Her.

"Some women are very selfish," said a woman speaker at a banquet. "They remind me of the woman who visited a fortune teller.

"'Lady,' said the fortune teller, shuffling the cards, 'fate decrees that you will visit foreign lands. You will mingle in the court life of kings and queens. Conquering all rivals, you will marry the man of your choice, a tall, dark, handsome gent of distinguished appearance, a peer of the realm.'

"'Will he be young?'

"'Yes; young and rich.'

"The visitor in her excitement clutched the seer's arm.

"'But how,' she cried eagerly—'how am I to get rid of my present husband?'"

Wet Clothing and Lightning.

If the clothing is wet lightning may pass over it as a good conductor without harming the body. On the other hand, persons may be killed without harm being done to the clothing. In rare instances bodies have been stripped naked by lightning. The coverings of the feet are liable to be seriously injured, because it is there that the lightning meets the greatest resistance in passing the body.

Of the 90,017 who enlisted from Michigan during the civil war, 14,342 never came back. Of the 56,601 survivors, it is estimated that about 10,000 are still living, though many of that small remnant of a once mighty host of as fine soldiers as ever shouldered a musket, are aged and feeble, and only about 2,500 were able to attend the recent reunion at Holland.

The following gentlemen from Charlevoix were visitors to the County Metropolis yesterday and paid a visit to The Citizen office to see the workings of the Linotype machine: Mayor Hampton, Postmaster Fitch, Genial Lou See and Debonair Lisle Shanahan. Only those who have sought to keep themselves informed as to the increase of the interest in the making of good roads in Michigan can know of the surprising progress made within the past few years. More than a million dollars have been appropriated by the various counties of the state for use this summer and the amount will be largely added to through private and corporation subscriptions. And what is particularly noteworthy in relation to these appropriations is that almost ninety per cent of the entire total is provided by counties north of the central part of the state.—Cadillac News and Express.

LOCAL OPTION MEETING

Held in This City Wednesday of Last Week.

Representatives of local option from East Jordan, Boyne City, Charlevoix and surrounding townships met at Van Pelt hall Wednesday afternoon last to consider the advisability of forming a permanent county organization in the interest of local option.

After a full discussion of the subject, it was decided to appoint a committee to draft articles of organization for a permanent county committee to be submitted at adjourned meeting.

The number in attendance and the interest manifested in the discussion, proves beyond question that the advocates of local option have lost none of their interest in the cause and the results thus far attained are fully up to the highest expectations of its adherents.

HAND FEEDING THE COLT.

May Be Raised on Milk if Done Patiently and Intelligently.

When a mare dies or has no milk for her foal it may be raised on cow's milk if the attendant conducts the work patiently and intelligently. The milk of a cow that has recently calved should be chosen, preferably of one which gives milk low in butter fat, for mare's milk, while rich in sugar, is poor in fat. The milk should be sweetened with molasses or sugar and diluted with warm water.

A little of this prepared milk should be given at short intervals from a scalded nursing bottle and large rubber nipple. Care should be taken to keep the bottle and nipple scrupulously clean. An ounce of limewater should be added to each pint of the prepared milk and half a cupful allowed once an hour at first.

As the foal grows the feeder should gradually increase the amount of milk fed and lengthen the intervals between meals. In a few days food may be given six times a day and later four times daily. The foal will soon learn to drink from a pail if allowed to suck the attendant's fingers at first.

Until the bowels move freely rectal injections should be given night and morning. If the foal scours at any time two to four tablespoonfuls of a mixture of sweet oil and pure castor oil shaken up in milk should be given and feeding of milk stopped for two or three meals, allowing sweetened warm water and limewater instead. The foal may lick oatmeal as soon as it will eat, and gradually the amount may be increased and wheat bran added.

In five or six weeks some sweet skimmilk may be given and the amount gradually increased daily until, in three months or so, it may be given freely three times a day in place of new milk. The foal at this age also will be eating freely of grass, grains and bran. At all times pure cold drinking water should be supplied.

Goaded.

Saving became a passion with the man and the woman. No privation was too great if so by it they might add to their accumulations. And they labored jointly. The woman's sacrifice was in every respect equal to that of the man.

But when they had amassed $10,000 the man, because he had the power, took the money and purchased with it not the automobile which he had led his faithful wife to expect, but a home. "Brute!" she cried, and when next a mob of suffragettes came that way she joined them. Who could blame her?—Puck.

A Light Eater.

"Look here," exclaimed the landlady, who had agreed to board and lodge a man at reduced rates. "You told me you were a light eater."

"So I am, ma'am," replied the boarder. "I'm the 'human salamander' at the local music hall. You ought to see me swaller burnin' torches!"—London Scraps.

A BAD ORCHARD ENEMY.

June is the month when careful inspection should be made of the young apple and pear trees to see that the newly hatched larvae of the borer beetle are headed off. While some orchardists incase the trunks of the young trees with wrappers of one kind or another, which extend a couple of inches into the soil, or paint the trunks with whitewash in which a rather strong solution of carbolic acid has been added, these precautions should not be allowed to take the place of an individual tree inspection. This is best done by keeping all grass and weeds hoed away from the trunk of the tree, getting down on all fours and carefully scraping the bark for a couple of inches below the surface of the ground with a sharp knife, a curved bladed pruning knife being preferable. The presence of the newly hatched borers will be indicated by a drop of discolored sap exuding from the bark or a tiny bit of brown wood dust. If the borers have been in the tree a year or more this brown excreta will be considerable, the adjacent bark giving a hollow sound when scraped with the knife. This dead bark should be carefully pared away and the borer or borers located, for sometimes four or five will be eating the life out of the same tree. Borers of the preceding year's hatch usually work down and sideways from the point of entrance, while those which have been in the tree two seasons are deeply bedded in the wood and are usually working up preparatory to their change to the beetle stage and emergence from the tree in this form some time in June. While a pliable wire is good for reaching these pests, a little peeled twig will answer the purpose nicely, the use of it often preventing a serious cutting of the bark and tree. When the borers have been cleaned out the wounds should be packed tight with moist soil, so as to hasten the healing process. There is no other single pest which does as much primary damage to fruit trees as borers, yet there is no orchard enemy which the novice seems to know so little about.

WILL BEAR WATCHING.

The present unexampled solicitude of the fruit jobbers' trust for the financial welfare of the independent fruit growers is entirely too belated to be credited with any large degree of philanthropy or altruism. Time was—and that but a short time ago—when all growers were independent—that is, each operated individually and was easy picking for the commission sharks, who saw that their victims got just enough returns for their produce to keep soul and body together, and sometimes not that much. The city buyers were banded together to quote a price for a given shipment of produce and then notify all members of the clique what that price was, and the victim could wait until he got black in the face, but he would get no better offer. In time growers woke up and realized how they had been hoodwinked and swindled. They are now organized, and organized effectively enough so that they are beginning to get fairly decent treatment from those who formerly plundered them at will. Some dissatisfaction has been felt by members of some growers' associations with prices received, and these are being enticed away from the organization by temporary decent treatment by the commission men and jobbers, but it is only for the purpose of disrupting these co-operative marketing organizations, when the old tactics can be counted on to put into play; hence when the fruit jobbers' trust displays undue kindness toward the independents it is safe to assume there is an ulterior motive behind it. There is a nigger in the wood pile.

HAND THINNING OF FRUITS.

When danger of frost is past and it is apparent that the trees have set more fruit than their size would seem to indicate that it will be possible for them to bring to a good sized maturity, hand thinning should be resorted to. This will not only reduce the number, but will at the same time improve both the size and quality of the fruit remaining, the total weight or volume of fruit not being reduced by the process, but simply being confined beneath fewer skins. The thinning in most of the western orchard districts is done when the apples are about the size of a shelled walnut, and the practice is to leave no fruit on the trees closer than six inches. The same rule holds for pears, while for smaller fruits, such as peaches and apricots, the distance at which the fruit is left apart is about four inches, varying somewhat upon the variety and size which it usually attains. If the thinning is carefully done much defective fruit may be eliminated in the process, thus reducing the number of culls which will have to be handled at harvest time.

Spinach and beets contain large quantities of iron, and this fact alone would seem to justify a generous consumption of them in the shape of greens by those whose blood needs toning up. Incidentally, too, when cooked with a nice piece of salt pork they make a mighty toothsome ration for a fellow whose blood doesn't need any tonic.

The burdock, one of the most common and sturdy of weeds known to every property owner, is a biennial—that is, lives two years. The young plants may be killed easily with the hoe, while those that are in their second year may be put out of business by running the root through with a spade a couple of inches below the crown.

There is no recipe for cooking soft boiled eggs that gives more uniform or more satisfactory results than putting the eggs in boiling water—an egg to a pint—setting the dish off the stove and allowing them to remain from eight to ten minutes, depending a bit upon how one wants them cooked. Eggs prepared in this way are evenly cooked and are never overdone, even if forgotten and left in the water overtime.

The man who will shoot robins or other song birds because they help themselves to a small portion of his berries or cherries seems to forget the fact that but for the birds man would die of starvation from having his garden and field crops overwhelmed with insect pests. He not only violates the laws of his state in killing the birds, but by so doing shows that he is too small and stingy to live among civilized folks.

One of the greatest boons that the good housewife can have along the line of aids in doing her work is linoleum for her kitchen and dining room floors. There is no grimed in dirt to dig out by main force and awkwardness, a mop being the only implement required to keep it looking fresh and clean. Especially will this improvement be appreciated in homes where the floors are of soft wood and have become badly worn.

After testing several methods of making clover hay Professor Roberts of the Cornell (N. Y.) experiment station recommends the following procedure as most satisfactory: He cuts the crop when moderately ripe and only during those hours of the day when the dew is off. The hay cut one day is left until the following day and while hot is put in small bunches and left until the next morning, when they are turned lightly and carefully and loaded with as little shaking as possible and mowed away, being salted at the rate of three pounds per ton as unloaded.

The animal husbandry department of the Pennsylvania Agricultural college reports the case of a creamery manager who refused a graduate of the state dairy school a ten dollar a month advance in wages, hired a man at the lower figure, and on the 49,000 pounds of butter made during the ensuing months lost $869 as a result of a slump in the overrun from 19 to 13 per cent. This is a concrete illustration of the shortsighted economies practiced by many folks engaged in many enterprises. The lesson is so plain that it does not need pointing.

The artichoke, until a few years ago considered a troublesome perennial weed, hard to eradicate, is now viewed by some hog raisers as a valuable source of succulent feed, the hogs being turned into the field in the fall or the tubers dug and stored for winter use. The artichoke is handled much as are potatoes and may be planted up to the latter part of May in sections where rainfall or artificial water supply is available for their proper growth. They yield as high as 300 to 400 bushels of tubers per acre, which contain more protein and more fat than do potatoes.

While paris green has been considered a standby as an insecticide by orchardists for a number of years past, recent experience shows arsenate of lead to be superior in that it does not burn or injure fruit or foliage, is insoluble in water and adheres to the foliage better than does the paris green. There are several brands of commercial arsenate which are carefully made and reliable and which require no preparation further than working to a fine, creamy paste and mixing with water at the rate of from two to three pounds to fifty gallons of water. In twenty-five pound kegs the arsenate can be bought at about 13 cents per pound.

While the soil bound orchard may produce fruit of a superior color and make the work at harvest time a little cleaner, these are about the only advantages that can be claimed for the plan. The main disadvantages of the system are that it too often furnishes an easy excuse for turning the orchard lot into a pasture, that it consumes moisture and fertility that the trees sorely need, while it reduces the size of the fruit from a third to a half and provides a harbor for a multitude of insect pests which are thus able to propagate undisturbed. If a careful survey of the situation seems to show that there is more money in raising hay than there is in producing fruit, the trees would better be cut out and the hay or pasture idea given the right of way.

Neighborhood Notes

Forty-five wolves have been killed in the lower peninsula during the last ten years, according to figures compiled by Auditor General Fuller for the federal agricultural department. For the scalps of the wolves there has been paid a bounty of $412.50 in Alcona, Alpena, Kent and Otsego counties.

State Highway Commissioner F. A. Ely says the upper peninsula is leading the state in the making of good roads. All but two of the upper peninsula counties are under a county system of road making and the results obtained prove that this plan is far in advance of the township idea.

The county is able to purchase the necessary machinery for crushing the rock, rolling it, and is far better able to handle the expenses attendant upon the task of laying roads than a township. The result is that the roads which are being built under the county system are good roads, as good as can be built, and in every case are earning the state rewards.

"Regulated" saloons and "blind pigs" are flourishing side by side in the counties of Michigan in which saloons are now permitted to exist. The saloon keepers of Muskegon county are grievously complaining over the fact that more than forty "blind pigs" are being operated nights and days and Sundays and holidays in their county. Just think what a noise would be made over it if one or two miserable little "blind pigs" were known or even thought to exist in local option county. Blind pigs seek first the territory in which they thrive best and that is why there are ten to one of them in the liquor selling counties of the state as compared to the local option counties. That blind pigs disturb the enforcement of local option to as great an extent as they disturb the enforcement of the liquor license laws is through official observation and carefully kept of expenses found to be absolutely untrue.

George Doxie of Cadillac, has returned from the upper peninsula where he was "running" timber for the Michigan Trust Co. He did not complete his task but was obliged to quit for the present on account of flies. Although protected by netting and "dope," the pests drove him out of the woods, the second time in over thirty years' experience in land looking and timber estimating. Mr. Doxie says men have be obliged to give up work for the present on account of the flies.

Mrs. Wm Goldie brought into Traverse City from the Golden fruit farm Of Mission, 1910 apples of the Greening and Russet varieties that were as firm and sound as when they were picked from the trees last October. Furthermore, these apples had a flavor that places them high in the estimation of apple experts. It is reported upon reliable authority that apples grown upon the high land of the northern part of western Michigan can be kept under favorable conditions for a period of two years.

"Money!" she burst out. "You have always said that the only way to help the poor was to love them."

"Yes, yes," His voice was impatient. "But, you see, there's that bakers' strike. I may be called up on the phone at any moment. I must stay here. Serious interests are at stake."

Margaret grew indignant. She stepped to the door, crossed the hall and knocked.

"Wait!" Philip said in astonishment, following her. "What are you going to do?"

"I am going to call Mr. Haggleton."

"You know who he is?"

"Yes."

She opened the door of the living apartment in answer to the call from within and said:

"Will you come out here a moment, Mr. Haggleton? You, too, Mr. Gentle, please?"

Haggleton and Gentle entered, an inquiry on their faces.

Margaret stepped between Haggleton and Philip, looking from one to the other.

"Phil," she said in a ringing voice, "for the last time choose between him and me!"

An idea struck Gentle.

"The battle is on," he said.

"What battle, Gentle?" asked Philip, but it was Margaret who answered him.

"The battle for you, Philip—the battle between your better self and your baser nature. I want you to speak out, Phil, right from your soul and say what you think of—Mr. Haggleton's life."

Philip was puzzled. "What has Mr. Haggleton's life to do with us?"

"More than you dream of, Phil." Her voice was steady.

"I like him."

"But what do you think of his business methods?"

"If you put it that way," he said—"why, I don't."

"Ah!"

Margaret's cry sounded glad.

Haggleton sat down at his desk and looked up at the young man.

"What is it you do not approve of in my business methods?"

"It's the old thing, monopoly and bribery and rebates. Why go into it all again?"

"Go on!" commanded Margaret.

Philip obeyed.

"You know very well, Mr. Haggleton," he continued, "that you and a dozen other men practically own this republic."

"No. Listen to me. No big work has ever been done in this world without leaders, and when a man delivers the goods he's entitled to the reward. Well, we have delivered the goods in this country."

Then, fixing his eyes on Philip, he resumed:

"Go over to Europe. They'll tell you that the United States is the greatest nation on earth, and it is. Why is it? Because the men you call robbers and grafters have organized things—railroads, industries, banks, everything."

"You have broken the law," said Gentle.

"You haven't been honest," added Margaret.

"Honest?" Haggleton smiled grimly. "We have kept to the standard of average honesty of this country, and no man can succeed in business who keeps above it. The faults of America's industrial leaders are the faults of the American people.

"You say we break the law, Mr. Gentle," he continued. "Well, we do. But who doesn't? Give the average American citizen an automobile and watch him break the speed law. Let a policeman stop him and see the flash of a ten dollar bill. That's bribery.

"Watch the average American woman back from Paris with a lot of new dresses. Does she smuggle them in? Well, watch her.

"I tell you, the only law anybody respects is custom. What does the average American citizen do when he wants a drink in a prohibition state? He breaks the law and gets the drink. And the average American woman when she tells the conductor how old her little boy is? She's a good mother and all that, but she'd let Jimmy ride on a half fare ticket until he had whiskers if she could."

Haggleton rose. He was reaching the direct personal application of his argument, the real point toward which he had been working.

"When it comes to business," he summed up, "the average American citizen does in a small way exactly what we do in a big way. Give him a chance to crush a rival and see how quick he'll take it."

He turned suddenly on Philip.

"What have you been doing to those opposition likers?"

Philip was taken aback.

"Why," he stammered, "I"—

"You have done in a small way what I have done in a big way," said Haggleton for him. "There you are. You and I. And remember this, you reformers, the way to improve things is to raise the standard of honesty of the American people."

Gentle brought the conversation back to its immediate personal bearing.

"All that is not to the point," he asserted. "Would you do as Mr. Haggleton has done?"

"Certainly not." Philip's answer came promptly. "I won't lead that kind of life."

"But you say that you are going into business," argued Margaret.

"Yes, but I am not going to be a railroad president or a trust magnate."

The situation was growing tense. Haggleton kept himself well in hand. "Suppose you were called upon to be the head of a great railroad or a trust?" asked Gentle.

Haggleton judged the moment ripe.

"If you had important interests in trust, Phil," he asked in his usual clear, incisive way, "would you protect them or would you sacrifice them?"

"I would protect them."

"Would you be dishonest?" persisted Gentle.

Haggleton reshaped the question.

"Would you cripple your business by refusing to allow practices sanctioned by custom?"

"Dishonest practices," Margaret put in swiftly—"would you, Phil?"

But Philip was bewildered now.

"I—I don't know," he stammered. "It isn't fair to ask such questions."

Margaret despaired.

"My poor boy!" she said.

Then, turning to Gentle:

"I am not going to be silent any longer."

Gentle made as if to restrain Margaret, but Haggleton nodded. He was ready for the disclosure and its consequences.

"I am going to do the last thing I can to prove my love for you, Philip," she said. "I am going to see to it that you know the truth; then I am going back to my work."

"You are not going to marry me?"

"No, dear; I cannot."

"But why? There is some mystery here."

He glanced at Gentle, at Haggleton and Margaret.

"Tell me," he pleaded. "What is it?"

She took a step forward, saying:

"Philip, Mr. Haggleton is your father."

ABOUT THE COLLIE.

A Good Strong Eye an Important Point In This Dog.

I notice in several papers breeders of Scotch collies advertising collies for sale as "natural heelers," says an expert on collie dogs. Now, that is entirely against the nature of a collie dog, to go to the heel. Any mongrel will run and fetch a hog by the hind end, but a good collie must get to the front.

I shall try to give an idea of how to start training a dog. The trainer must have great patience. I always let the pup start following me to the pasture when about four months old. Let him go out among the sheep every day without attempting to let him work. He will watch the old dog, and one day when a sheep runs he will make a move to stop it; then only is the time to make a start.

When wanted to go around some sheep get the sheep close to you to allow the dog to go clear around them. The first time call the dog up to your heel. Always start the dog from behind and teach it to stop when at the other side of the sheep. If the dog does right call him to you, pat him on the head and let him understand it is right. If, however, he tries to break in among the sheep call loudly to him, but do not whip him. One or two lessons the first day will be sufficient. Each day increase the lessons.

A dog should be taught to keep out wide from the sheep. A dog that runs too close is not considered a good dog. One of the best points a dog can have is a good strong eye. By that I mean one that will stand and set like a setter, never taking his eye from the sheep. A dog that runs when told and has no eye never makes sure. That is a most important point in a collie dog. Again I say a good strong eye and you need not fear.

When the Cows Are Nervous.

It is almost impossible to suggest a cure for some nervous habits in cows. Possibly the teats are sore and tender. If so, rubbing them with sweet oil after each milking might help. Give the cow some favorite food at milking time to distract her attention from the milking act.

Use System In Watering Horses.

Painstaking and experienced horsemen have proved beyond a doubt that horses seem to be better nourished when systematically watered before feeding and again two or three hours after.

Sheep Have Few Ailments.

Some farmers say they do not keep sheep because they are subject to disease, which is a great mistake, because properly cared for sheep have fewer ailments than any other farm animal.

Voting In Austria.

Every person in Austria who has the right to vote is compelled to exercise that right.

LESSON FROM TROLLEY CARDS.

Advertising Men Alive to Value of Home Trade.

THEY URGE LOCAL BUYING.

Cars of Bronx Borough, New York City, Carrying Appeals to Purchasers to Get Their Goods From Their Own Stores—A Policy of Mutual Helpfulness and Co-operation.

In the trolley cars of Bronx borough, New York city, are displayed some advertising cards placed among the other advertisements, presumably without charge, by the company which controls the advertising in the cars of the borough. The cards inform the riders and readers that the articles advertised in the cars are to be found in the stores of the borough and advise the intending purchasers to procure them at home. It is understood, of course, that the quality of standard articles is the same wherever they are purchased, and it is assumed that the merchants of the borough will make as reasonable prices on the articles as any one will.

The position taken by the advertising company in thus helping along the men who help it certainly seems to be a wise one. Local purchasers are induced to buy standard goods, advertised all over the country as well as in the local cars, from the local merchants. The latter are, in turn, enabled to buy advertising space in the cars. The Germans, who are prolific makers of wise sayings, have an old saw which says, "One hand washes the other, and both become clean." It is an encouraging sign of the growing prosperity of the borough that the local merchants are using more and more space in the cars and that the borough newspapers are flourishing as never before.

Isn't there here a moral to be gleaned by other places? The moral is, Encourage home trade by all means. The trade that goes out of a town does not benefit it; it is the trade that seeks and finds its natural outlet at home that helps. It counts not only for the man who gets it, but for the man who gives it, for the latter helps his neighbor as well as himself.

The uplifting of the general level of prosperity which is apt to follow keeping trade at home helps every man and woman in a town by keeping up wages, by distributing profits so that everybody in a town gets a share, direct or indirect, of the benefit.

The mail order houses have their place in the business world, and they do good—to the men who run them, many of whom have accumulated much money in the business. But when they take out of any particular town money that should be spent there legitimately they cannot be said to be a benefit to that town.

In addition, there is the personal and social side of the question. Looking at it as fairly as you will, buying goods from a catalogue and sending to a strange, faraway city the money that has been earned in one's home town, often with the advice and cooperation of one's neighbors, is a cold blooded proposition.

How much better it is to meet your neighbor man to man, over your counter or over his, and sell to him or buy from him what one needs! If "life is made up of little things," as has been said very often, the little friendlinesses and greetings of personal intercourse are worth something, probably more than the small profit that is to be gained by patronizing a house far away that can be nothing but the embodiment of "business." And in many cases the monetary profit is only imaginary when the time and bother involved in the transaction and the real worth of goods bought are taken into consideration.

CHARLES N. LURIE.

Dustless Ash Removal Scheme.

Street Cleaning Commissioner Edwards of New York appeared before the finance committee of the board of aldermen recently and asked for $15,000 with which to make experiments aimed to do away with the dust and exposed garbage nuisance. The scheme proposed contemplates the carrying of ash cans from houses to the dump direct without emptying them into carts. The $15,000, if obtained, is to be spent for an auto car carrier, a relay truck, cans, dustless cover devices and other things of the kind. This is considered by many an excellent idea, for it will undoubtedly tend to keep towns and cities in a clean and healthful condition.

Don't Murder Your Trees.

Frequently large signboards are placed against street trees. Where they are fastened with iron bands the latter will soon cut into the very life of the tree, preventing the free circulation of the sap and thereby injuring top and root equally. It is nothing new to see trees half dead standing for years in front of handsome residences, fighting hard for life, shortened by neglect and abuse. The owner is too indolent to have the dry limbs removed, the old, exhausted soil renewed, and so improve, at least for a time, the appearance of the sufferers.

A Town's Main Street.

A drummer whose route takes in fifty towns in Illinois and Indiana says that a town which will not keep its main business street in good repair steadily loses its farmer trade and by and by its best business men.

Literary Notes

"To keep a 'good light'—that is, one which is always reliable, always on time; which never goes out, except for those unavoidable instants when a chimney burns," says C. H. Claudy in the Woman's Home Companion for July. "To have each glass of the hundreds flashing like diamond; to have every part of the equipment immaculate; never to have the light 'go black' and be reported—these are the simple ambitions and the code of laws of the light keepers. And nothing, nothing, must keep the light from being lit, and staying lit. And no excuse, save that of an act of God, can avail a keeper if his light is 'black' and it becomes known.

"There is a tale which was told to the writer by an old, old light-keeper—who had been keeper of a First Order, Second order, then a Third order and finally a Fourth order light, at his own request, where he could pass the remainder of his days with the lesser duties of the smaller light. 'Sim was a fine keeper,' said the old keeper. 'He was thirty-two years on the Point Blank Light and never once had his light 'gone black' nor anything been said against him. He loved his light next to his wife. Had he loved his wife second and his light first she would be there yet. Both his assistants were off, one sick t'other away somewhere, and Jim was sitting up nights with the light and doing the housework, days, 'cause his woman was sick too. And it told on him. And one night Jim dropped off to sleep in his chair under the light.' He slept twenty minutes. When he woke, the place was full of smoke and his light was black. Chimney had melted. The light was reported to Washington, and Jim had to go to the board. He said they took him in like a brother and treated him like a friend, but he knew he had to go. They said they hated to do it, that they knew his record was fine, but that while they were sure it would never happen again, still for the good of the service and what effect it would have on the rest of us, he had to go.—His heart is broken, and it killed his wife. But they are two: the lights are for all of them—' and the old man waved his arm toward the bay and its teeming life of ships."

WHAT MUSSELMAN STANDS FOR.

"The Governor shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

The administration of a true Republican for the best interests of the state, the people and the party.

An administration founded on the much needed business principles.

The application of strict business principles to every detail of the state government.

Careful protection of deposits in private as well as state and national banks, placing all under strict supervision.

The employment of convicts in such labor as will least interfere with free labor while at the same time uplifting the morals of the prisoner.

The taxation of mining properties by whatever method as shall after careful investigation seem best fitted to draw out from them a just share of the state tax burden.

The encouragement of temperance, local option but not at the present time statewide prohibition, and the strict enforcement of the law in counties which have voted dry under a principle of home rule.

Civil service applied to all employes of the state, reducing the political equation to the minimum.

This is the platform in brief upon which Amos S. Musselman, the Grand Rapids business man, stands in his candidacy for governor. These are his beliefs in the way Michigan should be governed.

A successful business man himself, he believes firmly in the application of business principles to the government of Michigan because he sees where Michigan needs business methods to pull her out of the financial hole into which she has sunk in the last few years.

Amos Musselman, sitting in his office in the Musselman Grocer company which he has built up, presents the highest type of business man. The company had a very small beginning about 30 years ago. Today it is one of the most firmly established houses in Michigan, and Musselman is the man who placed it on its foundation. The same ability which caused this company to grow he will apply to the affairs of Michigan.

Amos Musselman seeks the governorship because Michigan needs him, because, from all over the state business men have been urging a business man to take up the reins of government and put Michigan on a sound financial basis. He seeks the office because from all over Michigan have come letters from farmers urging him to enter and telling him he represents more nearly than any other candidate the kind of administration the farmers want. (Geo. B. Horton, of Fruit Ridge, former master of the Grange, is one of this class). He enters the race because he is public-spirited and wishes to do for Michigan all that his ability will permit.

Mr. Musselman was born of good old sturdy Dutch stock, just 12 years before General Robert E. Lee entered Pennsylvania in his intended invasion of the North. As a boy at home Amos heard the roar of battle and smelled the smoke from the battle of Gettysburg. A few days after the great struggle he tramped over the ground where the armies fought, and on the day the field was dedicated a national cemetery he stood by the side of the speaker's stand and heard from the lips of Abraham Lincoln that speech which has since become famous.

He was educated at Gettysburg college and took a business course at Poughkeepsie. Upon his graduation he accepted a position as a teacher in the banking department of the institution. But he was not satisfied to work for somebody else all his life. In 1876 he came to Grand Rapids and took employment as a clerk in a wholesale tea and coffee house. A short time later he formed a copartnership to do a general wholesale grocer business. In five years' time he bought out his partners and reorganized, associating himself with William Widdicomb, now one of the largest furniture manufacturers in Grand Rapids. In 1893 the business was incorporated with a capital stock of $70,000, and since that time has gone on, expanding, until it was merged in the National Grocer company, with Amos Musselman at the head.

He has just resigned the presidency of this company in order to devote his whole time to his campaign; and, if elected, to be free of entangling business cares, so as to devote his entire time to the public service.

THE TEMPLE BELL.

A Mysterious Disappearance and the Explanation.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Hedges and I tolled up the dry bed of Furnace creek and left Death valley.

"Hark!" said Hedges in a strange voice.

Across the hidden jagged ranges came a sweet musical echo. It was repeated again and yet again to my astounded ears.

"It's a bell," I almost screamed at him, "a bell here—a church bell in Death valley!"

With a choking cry Hedges turned from my side. I heard the stamping of his mule and then the scurrying clatter of small hoofs on rocky ledges.

"Come on!" he shouted from a turn in the trail. "There in Indian Pass—the voice of the temple bell which the sacrificial priests swung when I was held captive by the savages! I was left to my fate and [illegible] the last I saw of the desert with its [illegible]

A great eagerness was in my heart, and in my heart was a yearning pity for the poor, the poor of the world whose feet I longed to point to [illegible] of gold—and I hastened forward eager to give of that I had back [illegible].

The bell rang softly as I approached, and every chime fell sweetly on my pitying heart. A faint red glow was reflected on the rocks ahead, and around the bend of a large bowlder I came upon the temple in the wilderness.

The red light came from the sanctuary lamp burning within the tiny building. It tinted the gray rocks with a strange, unearthly coloring and gave to the white walls of the temple a delicate rosiness.

My knife ripped a hole in the canvas sack, and then, staggering beneath of his great weight, I lifted the gold and poured the precious lumps into the alms basin.

As the last lump of ore clanked into the basin the clearness in my head seemed to snap as if some one had struck me a sharp blow. I felt myself sinking, sinking to the marble floor. It seemed years before I felt its cooling touch on my cheek, and then all was dark.

* * * * * * *

When I awoke stars were shining out of a black sky, and I heard a hoarse whinny from the burro near by. I was lying on my back, and my temples throbbed dully.

The white temple had disappeared. My eager search among the rocks was unavailing.

Thus I found myself a beggar at the gate of Death valley.

I knew that Furnace Creek ranch was somewhere—it must be near, and without food and with only a small canteen of water I set forth on a journey that I knew must end in death.

The next day I met Hedges. He was riding slowly toward me with eyes fixed on the ground. Behind him trailed a pack mule. His bag of ore had disappeared.

"Medford!" he almost sobbed as I trudged painfully into view. He slipped from his mule and ran toward me with outstretched hands. "What is the matter, old man? Why didn't you follow me that night? I had to go. You see, I had heard the bell before!"

I stared at him from hopeless eyes and he read the truth.

"You didn't you followed the bell?" he stammered.

"Yes," I said thickly.

"And your gold—the ore?"

"I gave it—gave it to the poor of the world," I said bitterly. "I had to do it."

He nodded understandingly. "I will tell you my experience, Peter, after you have eaten. I have food here and materials for a fire. I will make some coffee."

"Where have you been?" I asked.

"I found the ranch. I left my sack there and loaded with food to return for you. Don't say another word until you have rested."

Late in the afternoon when the sun was drawing down behind the dark range Hedges told his story:

"Five years ago, before I met you, Medford, I traveled for a large dealer in precious stones. I went to Calcutta on the track of a pair of magnificent pigeon blood rubies, the property of a gambling maharajah, who was hard pressed by his creditors.

"These I bought, together with several other splendid stones, the combined value of which was $200,000.

"I walked into Calcutta from the maharajah's palace just as dusk was falling. Perhaps the pressure of my revolver against my breast gave me assurance, for it is a dark and lonely road, but there was a fascination in watching the dying of the red glowing Indian sunset and the coming of the velvet black darkness jeweled above with stars and pointed here and there with gleaming lights from scattered dwellings.

"I was crossing a black stretch of wild [illegible] and weeds when I first heard [illegible] ple bell—the [illegible] last [illegible]

"[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] was still [illegible] and a part [illegible] The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] his head in his hands and [illegible] still.

"And you—old comrade!" I cried after a [illegible]

"I [illegible] [illegible]," groaned Hedges. His head [illegible] ran into the city and found a man whom I knew, and he put great forces to work and discovered nothing. No one had seen or heard of such a temple, and they believed I had been drinking and been [illegible]

"I would be breaking stone now if I had not had a rich relative who lent me the fortune to replace the stolen gems. I am repaying him now."

"Of course I am ruined," I said.

"Half of what I have is yours, Peter, and you can pay me back," he said quickly.

I held up my hand. "I couldn't, Hedges. You know I am grateful. I am engaged to marry Ethel Lambert, as you are aware. I have nothing but my profession, no capital whatever, and I made this journey down into hades for the gold to get a start. I have lost it and must begin again. I cannot ask her to wait much longer, and the professor"—

"Is Professor Lambert so stiff on money?" demanded Hedges. "I thought him quite the other way, you know."

"He isn't a bit mercenary," I said hastily, "only I haven't got the face to take Ethel from her luxurious home into the poor quarters I can now afford, and so"—.

"So you'll both be miserable forever after," interrupted Hedges dryly. "Let's go back to San Francisco and see Professor Lambert before you do anything desperate."

We resumed our journey the next day and several weeks afterward found me dressed once more in civilized garments, shaven and shorn, ringing the professor's doorbell. I did not ask for Ethel, though my eyes were aching to see her, and so I was taken through the house and into the long passageway that led to the laboratory.

Professor Lambert was a metallurgist. I found his gray head bent above some fragments of greenish metal on the table.

When he had warmly greeted me I told my unlikely story, knowing it was scarcely credible, yet when I had concluded the professor took me by the hand and led me into a back room.

Then he told me the story of how he had experimented with bell tones, hoping to carry out a theory of his own that some day he might produce a bell whose tones might find a response in human hearts. He hoped to attain a pitch of tone whose vibration might strike a chord of human sympathy in every heart, that the hearing of it might promote good fellowship and love and end in universal peace—a very pretty theory.

The one casting he had made had resulted in producing that strange bell whose call was to sacrifice, to give all in response to its command. Startled at the production and still uncertain as to its value, he was shocked to awake one morning and find that his assistant had disappeared and with him the bell.

Secretly he had pursued the man. His agents had trailed the thief from country to country, and even after he had fallen senseless in the little chapel and had been thrown into outer darkness by the adventurer the detectives had fallen upon the temple and carried it and the thief triumphantly to San Francisco and Justice.

A train of burros carried the singe setting from place to place. Wherever men walked in solitary places with gold or silver or precious stones the temple might be found.

"Your gold ore is in that sack in the corner," concluded the professor, with a smile. "And now suppose you go down and see Ethel."

Eager as I was to meet my sweetheart, I waited long enough to telephone the strange story to Hedges, patiently waiting in the hotel to share his golden store with me, before I went to claim my happiness.

At Annual School Meeting Held Monday Night.

F. J. MEECH RE-ELECTED TRUSTEE

City to Rent Basement of Carnegie Library Building.

Library to be Open Afternoon and Evening Tax to be Nine Mills. List of Teachers for Next Year.

The chief feature of the annual school meeting held on Monday night was the small attendance.

The meeting was called to order by President Iddings, who briefly gave a resume of the board during the year, speaking of the change in superintendents, and that Mr. DeVoe, as well as the entire faculty had demonstrated their ability as teachers and the regret of the board in having to part with some of last year's corps. Mr. Iddings explained the Cullen matter and also called attention to other matters which would come before the meeting.

Treasurer Bridge and Secretary Meech read their annual reports, which were accepted and a tax of nineqtills, ordered for the next year.

The principal discussion of the evening was over the proposition to use the basement of the Carnegie Library building for city offices, several taking part in the discussion. The advantages were ably set forth by Mayor Hampton and other members of the city government and others. While it was opposed by some who thought the room could better be used for other purposes. In the end the board was directed to enter into a contract with the city for the rental of the basement. The chief objection was that smoking might be indulged in but it was made plain that smoking would be abolished in the building.

Another matter was the time during which the library should be open, and after some discussion the board were instructed to, as soon as possible, provide for the opening of the library every week day afternoon and evening.

The retiring member of the board, F. J. Meech was re-elected by a practically unanimous vote.

The following is the list of teachers employed for 1910-11 with salaries.

WORK THAT TOLD

Was Did at Washington by our Representative.

Seldom Does a First Termer Accomplish so Much.

Hon. F. H. Dodds returned home to Mt. Pleasant Monday, from Washington, where he had been participating in national legislation as a member of the house in congress. Mr. Dodds has worked hard at the capitol, as is his nature to work at home, and he accomplished much for his constituents, much more than could be reasonably expected of one serving his first term there. The eleventh district of Michigan fared extraordinarily well through the efforts of its servant.

In addition to the regular biennial appropriation of $25,000 for the Indian Industrial School in this city, Mr. Dodds secured $3,000 for a hospital and $3000 more for the erection of an office building. The last named improvement at the school will not be commenced however, until a further appropriation is allowed, so a dormitory can be built in connection. These appropriations assure the continuance of the school for years to come.

Mr. Dodds secured for his district $50,000 for an addition to the federal building at Traverse City, $70,000 for a federal building at Big Rapids and $10,000 for a site at Boyne City. He secured the passage of 19 private pension bills varying in amount from $24 to $40 per month. He worked zealously against strong opposition, but finally succeeded in passing his bill to reopen investigation into the claims of the hands of Chippewa Indians of this section, and by it the court of claims is authorized to impose judgment against the United States when the claims are established.

Probably the most important piece of legislation that he introduced was a bill to allow periodical publications issued by benevolent and fraternal societies, trades unions and other societies to carry advertising and still be permitted the privileges of the mails at second-class postage rates. He got this bill through the house, and it now rests in the senate committee ready to be taken up at the winter session.

Mr. Dodds is a member of the committee on postoffice and postroads, which is among the most important committies of the house. He has made a large acquaintance among his fellow members, and also with senators, and is generally recognized at Washington we are told as an honorable and capable representative. We are pleased that the eleventh district furnishes a congressman who contributes positively to the distinction that the Michigan delegates has acquired—that of standing at the very front among the delegations from the states in point of ability and unanimity in legislation.—Mt. Pleasant Times.

HOUSE FLIES DANGEROUS

Board of Health Issues Directions. Warning Against Them.

Don't allow flies in your house.

Don't permit them near your food especially milk.

Don't buy foodstuffs where flies are tolerated.

Don't eat where flies have access to the food.

To get rid of flies, screen your windows and doors. Do it early before fly time and keep screens up until snow falls.

Screen your foods, especially milk. Do not eat food that has been in contact with flies.

Screen the baby's bed and keep flies away from the baby's bottle, the baby's food and the baby's comforter.

Keep flies away from the sick, especially those ill with typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diptheria and tuberculosis. Screen the patient's bed. Kill every fly that enters the sickroom. Immediately disinfect and dispose of all discharges. Catch the flies as fast as they appear. Use liquid poisons, sticky flypaper and traps.

To clear room of flies, burn pyrethrum powder or blow powdered black flag into the air of the room with a powder blower. This causes flies to fall to the floor in stunned condition. They must then be gathered up and destroyed.

Sprinkle chloride of lime or kerosene over contents of vaults and garbage boxes. Keep garbage receptacles tightly covered, clean the cans every day, the boxes every week. Keep the ground around garbage boxes clean.

Sprinkle chloride of lime over old paper, old straw and other refuse of like nature.

Pour kerosene into the drains. Keep sewage systems in good order, repair all leaks immediately.

Clean cuspidors every day. Keep a five per cent solution of carbolic acid in them all the time. Get rid of sawdust boxes used as cuspidors; destroy them; they're unsanitary.

Don't allow dirt to accumulate in corners, behind doors, back of radiators, under stoves, etc.

Allow no decaying matter of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

Flies in the home indicates a careless housekeeper. Remember—No dirt, no flies. If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood, notify the board of health.

DAIRY INDUSTRY

Has Made Wonderful Progress in the United States.

Value of Product is One Billion Dollars Every Year.

According to the last year book of the Department of Agriculture, there are 21,720,000 milch cows in the United States, and these are worth $702,945,000. The magnitude of the industry can perhaps be best understood when it is considered that these cows produce yearly about $1,000,000,000 worth of dairy products.

There is no other branch of diversified agriculture so important to the progress of the community. The fertility of the soil can best be maintained by the liberal use of barnyard manure and the dairy herd not only makes this possible, but dairying is also more remunerative than other branches of farming when properly carried on.

Dairying has made wonderful progress since the advent of the modern creamry and the consumer of butter has not only been benefitted by being furnished a more wholesome and palatable article of food, but the wife in the farm home has been relieved of the drudgery incident to making butter on the farm. Where formerly the cream was ripened and churned into butter under conditions not conducive to fine quality in the finished product and in the majority of cases by unskilled hands, now the most of the milk or cream is delivered to a modern creamery where conditions are suited to the purpose of making butter, and the result has been a wonderful improvement in the quality of our dairy products. As the quality has improved consumption has increased and the progress of dairying has been remarkable during the past decade.

The perpetuity of the country's greatness depends upon increasing the production of farm products from year to year, a result which not only furnishes our people with food but maintains the prosperity of our farming communities. Increase in production can only come through improved methods of agriculture and soil improvement. When it is considered that the dairy cow is the foundation for soil improvement and farming prosperity, her importance is best understood, and interest in her should not be confined to her owner. She is an important factor in the development and prosperity of our country.

LAWSON FOR OSBORN

Denies Report That He Opposes Man From the Soo.

Jerry is Candidate for Treasurer of His County.

The following from the Soo News of Saturday will be of interest to the many friends of Jerry Lawson in this county:

Supervisor Jerry Lawson, who has been in the city during the week in attendance at the July session of the board, is considerably concerned over reports being circulated about him, which he charges as false and malicious. Mr. Lawson, who is a candidate for county treasurer, and also that he is opposed to the nomination of Chase. S. Osborn for governor, neither of which he says, is true.

"I voted against the resolution offered at the meeting of the board of supervisors last spring endorsing the candidacy of Mr. Osborn," said Mr. Lawson, "because owing to my position I could not then do otherwise. I am an officer of the state grange, and I knew at the time that it was the intention of the grange to put certain questions up to the various candidates for governor touching on matters in which the organization is interested, and I did not care to commit myself until these questions had been answered. Mr. Osborn in answer to these questions came out fairly and strongly and in a manner that was pleasing and satisfactory to the grangers throughout the state, and while I always favored our home candidate I am more than pleased to be able to give his candidacy my open and hearty endorsement and shall do all in my power to nominate him. So far as withdrawing from the race for county treasurer, you may say that I am still in the game and will so remain to the finish."

IMMENSE CROWD WAS PRESENT

At Osborn Meeting at Opera House, Wednesday Night.

GOV. HARMON AND EX-GOV. FIFER

Were Present and Addressed the Meeting.

Mr. Osborn Made a Host of Friends in a Whirlwind Tour of County, Who Look to Him to Govern the State Wisely

Hon. Chase S. Osborn began his campaign tour of the state at Petoskey Tuesday, putting in his first day in Emmett county. Wednesday morning Mr. Osborn and party opened the campaign in Charlevoix county, at Boyne Falls at which place they were met by representatives from Boyne City and Charlevoix.

Mr. Osborn, Mayor McCuiston of Boyne City and City Attorney Shanahan of Charlevoix spoke to the audience who had assembled at this point to greet Mr. Osborn. From Boyne Falls the party went by auto to Boyne City, where Mr. Osborn spoke in the city park and afterwards met the citizens of our sister city. After dinner the trip to East Jordan was made where Mr. Osborn found a large crowd waiting to greet him. For a half hour Mr. Osborn spoke outlining his platform and telling what he would do if elected governor.

The next stopping point was Ironton where a large crowd had gathered to see and hear Michigan's next governor. Mayor McCutston, Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas and Mr. Shanahan also spoke at this meeting.

Leaving Ironton the party left for this city where, after a sight seeing tour of our many beautiful points of interest, supper was taken at The Elston, after which the party proceeded to the opera house, which was filled. Excursions having been run from both Boyne City and East Jordan, the crowd from the latter place having brought a band with them.

Mayor Hampton presided at this meeting and first introduced Ex-governor Fifer of Illinois, who will probably be the next Democratic candidate for president of the United States, spoke in an interesting manner for about twenty minutes, after which he introduced Gov. Harmon of Ohio. Mr. Harmon said that while he ought to feel out of place in a Republican meeting as a Republican had carried his state by 65,000 for president, while he had been elected governor on the Democratic ticket he must have lots of friends among the Republicans and so would feel quite at home. The governor spoke of the reasons why the voters of his state had thought it necessary to vote for the man irrespective of party, and of the duties of the position of chief executive of the state. He also said that as the Republicans of Michigan were in the habit of electing their governor and he was a taxpayer in Michigan, he was interested in who was governor and as Mr. Osborn was of Ohio parentage he was all right.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson sang "The Sword of Bunker Hill" after which Mayor Hampton in a few eloquent remarks introduced Mr. Osborn as Michigan's Roosevelt."

Mr. Osborn, from the first, charmed his hearers with the power of his eloquence in talking about Michigan and his desire to give her the kind of government she deserves. In no uncertain terms he spoke of the condition of affairs in our state government and the need of a housecleaning and left his hearers without doubt that a time had arisen in the history of Michigan when a man of the stamp of Chase S. Osborn was needed in the governor's chair.

After the meeting the stage was thronged with our citizens who greeted the distinguished guests and wished Mr. Osborn all success in his ambition to serve his state.

CORRESPONDENCE

CENTRAL LAKE

Asa Doty is working in the harness store for Mr. Horobeck.

Mr. H. F. Homer and family visited at the bay one day this week.

Eldon Cobb is so far improved in health as to be able to get to town.

O. R. and C. H. Morse are hoeing after the rogueing of peas for Leonard Seed Co. at Buckley.

These teachers are located for next year as follows: Mrs. Harry Clark at Bay View, A. G. Morse at Iray district, east of this place; and J. W. Morse at Eastport.

R. R. Wilkinson has returned from Georgia. He is now very feeble in health owing to injuries received a few weeks ago from a fall. He is getting medical aid of Dr. Chamberlin.

It is amusing to note how solicitous some people are for local option. As soon as the local option people make an effort to get good clean men for county office, those who pledge themselves to see the local option law enforced, then the cry of "their going into politics" is raised; and, "the men are trying to get an office by championing local option." We will be charitable enough to think that some of "the criers" do it in good faith, but it probably is mostly a clever ruse of the liquor men to divide the local option forces, and thus get a wet man into office who will not enforce the local option law. If wet men are put into office it means that the county is liable to go back to wet. If Charlevoix goes wet, it will be bad for Antrim. They are working the same game down here. Don't be fooled, friends of local option. Stand by your guns! Every man who voted dry, go in for a dry man for office even if you have to nominate him yourself. Politics cut no figure when you're working to save the boy.

As we have not written since the Antrim County Fruit Growers convention, a few words may not be amiss here in regard to that meeting. It was one of the largest, if not the largest ever held. Probably there were 150 people present.

The meeting held at the home of the president, R. E. Morrow was a very fine location for such a gathering. He has a very pleasant grove near his residence, which was finely fixed up with seats, tables for the dinner, etc.

The members and in fact nearly all present responded to roll call by giving the name of their favorite flower. The rose lead as the favorite. Some gave tulips, sweet williams, Pillsbury's best and tuck wheat flour.

W. S. Stevens of Grand Rapids gave a fine paper on the marketing of apples. Particular stress was placed on the fact of having all good fruit and the same throughout barrel or basket. He said baskets were getting to be the favorite way of shipping.

The meeting was a very successful one throughout. The next meeting will be held at the Firm home of Mr. Pinnell, west of Bellaire.

HOME GROUND ATTRACTIVENESS.

Tends to Refine and Elevate Whole Communities.

SIMPLICITY AND DIGNITY.

They Are the Two Words That Give the Keynote to Success In Arranging Shrubbery and Trees on the Lawn—Laying the Walk Is Important.

The home is the center of all that most people hold dear and is one of the best means of attracting visitors and settlers to the town. It is therefore of the highest importance that its surroundings should be such as will have a refining and elevating influence upon the children and young people, as well as upon the whole community. It is not necessary for one to be rich or even well to do in order to enjoy the delights of an attractive home. The writer knows men and women of the most humble stations in life who by a little care and attention to lawn and trees and shrubbery have developed beautiful effects.

A WELL ARRANGED LAWN

When we speak of beautifying the home grounds our first thought is to go immediately to a landscape gardener and turn the whole matter over to him. This will do very well in case you have sufficient means to warrant and also in case you are so situated that you can easily change your present home grounds and make them what a landscape gardener would want.

The object of this article is not to supplant the landscape gardener, for we all owe too much to him to interfere in any way with his calling. But our object is to suggest some way by which it may be possible to suppliment what you already have about your home in order to bring out the lines of beauty and charm and make your home a delight and satisfaction to your family and your friends.

If you call in a good landscape gardener his first observation will be the general lay of the ground and size of the lot. Then he will gradually begin to evolve certain curves and angles, a tree here, certain shrubs there and an open grass plot in front or at the side. In the making of his outlines the landscape gardener may wreck some of your own cherished plans.

Where you may have had some straight and angular road in mind he will advise a gentle curve, and where you may wish to go directly he may choose to lay out the path by a gentle detour which would make possible some special effects in shrubbery or trees. If your house is already thickly surrounded by trees he may advise a liberal use of the ax for the health and brightness of the home.

There are three important divisions to all landscape gardening—namely, the house, the lawn and the trees and shrubs. If you are building you will of course lay out your ground and locate your house in such a way as to make it fit in most effectively with your plans for lawn and shrubbery. Too many people build the house first and think about the arrangement of the place afterward. An hour or more with pencil and paper, sketching out your ground from different angles, will mean more in the final outcome than you can easily imagine.

Right here we want to emphasize as strongly as we may that just as surprising results, in a small way at least, can be achieved with a small lot and a cottage as with a mansion on large grounds. It will require more brains to arrange the small lot effectively than the large one.

Simplicity and dignity are the two words that give the keynote to all successful work in the arrangement of the home grounds. After the buildings have been located and the grounds properly graded the next step is to determine the question of driveways and walks.

These must depend very largely upon the nature of the grounds and the convenience of the people using them. It will be found that any attempt to establish a walk around and out of one's way will defeat its own ends, and the lawn will suffer as a result, especially so if the walk is used for practical purposes. This does not necessarily mean, that the walk should be laid in a straight line, but that it should start and end at the most natural points.

Why They Don't Grow.

"The most I remember about the town," said a traveler when asked about a certain village, "is that there were hogs wallowing in the mudholes in the streets, every house wanted repainting, and the hitching posts in front of the stores all leaned over as if tired out. There are a good many towns like that in the country, and yet their inhabitants wonder why they don't grow faster."

CHAPTER XVIII.

MORAN FINDS HIS MAN.

THE young man started violently. His father!

This, then, was the mystery of his parentage, which Gentle had known so long. But Margaret—how did she know?

But, then, was it true? Neither Gentle nor Haggleton had volunteered to affirm the statement. A doubt came to him. "My name is Philip Ames, is it not?" he asked Gentle.

The old diver answered, "Your name is Philip Haggleton."

So it was true. Suddenly he began to see clear. Much that had puzzled him was explained, though as much again remained obscure.

"So that's why you are leaving me, Margaret?" he asked. "That's why you will not marry me?"

He was in love, deeply in love. He did not stop to realize what he gained; he only appreciated what he would lose! Margaret would not marry him!

He turned to his father.

"What reason had you," he asked sternly, "for not telling me that I am your son?"

"Because, Philip, I wanted you to know me as a man before you knew me as a father."

Margaret interposed.

"Was that your only reason, Mr. Haggleton?" she asked severely. "Didn't something happen in your first talk with Mr. Gentle?"

Philip, anxious to probe to the bottom of this mystery, acted upon her suggestion.

"Did something happen, Gentle?" he asked.

"Yes, Philip, something happened."

"Some wrong has been done, and Mr. Gentle knows it," persisted Margaret.

"Whatever wrong there was," said the diver impressively, "will be atoned for nobly. Your father, Philip, will put aside $10,000,000 for a splendid campaign against poverty."

"So that's how he managed you, Mr. Gentle!" cried Margaret, tears of defeat in her eyes.

"One moment," cried Haggleton in that crisp, penetrating voice of his, which commanded attention.

"Philip," he went on, "you have said that you did not want to judge any man. Now listen well. Can you understand a man doing something under sudden temptation that he regrets afterward?"

"Yes, I can."

"Can you understand that there might be some one whom this man loved very much who would suffer pain—needless pain—if told what he had done? Can you understand that?"

"Yes," said Philip once more, glancing at Margaret, "I can."

"That's not the case," interrupted the girl. "This is it: Your mother deprived you of your name and birthright. That was a monstrous crime unless she had justification. You can understand that?"

"You are right, Miss Lawrence," admitted Gentle, suddenly convinced.

"For his mother's sake," he continued, turning to Haggleton, "I'm sorry, but—here, Philip."

He drew from his pocket the incriminating document in its envelope and handed it to the young man.

"Is this something I ought to read?" he asked of his old friend.

"In my opinion, no. That's why I have kept it from you. But if you insist"—

"I don't insist."

Haggleton was waiting, watching breathlessly.

Philip made a movement as if to return the envelope to Gentle, who refused to take it with a gesture.

"Think of your mother, Philip," implored Margaret.

Haggleton saw on the young man's face that he had won.

"My mother is dead," said Philip softly. "I have a right to think a little of my father."

"Philip!"

"You know I love you, Margaret," his son went on, with wistful tenderness. "Whatever you do, wherever you go, I shall always love you—always. I love Gentle too. He has been a father to me. I trust him. He knows the secret of this paper; you don't. He can judge, and," with a sudden rush of appeal, "let me do my duty, dear, as I feel it. I must."

He went over to the stove, threw the envelope and its secret into the glowing coals.

The flames died down, leaving an oblong of black ashes, curling at the corners, rapidly turning to a whitish gray.

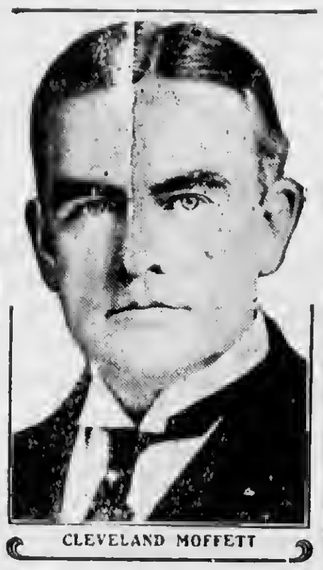
"I have tried to save you, Philip," she said sadly, "and I have failed. I am going."

"Do not go yet, Miss Lawrence," Haggleton was saying. "You started this trouble; now you will see it through."

"It is all very well to burn that statement," he went on with great deliberation, "but you cannot burn the memory of it, Philip. It would always come between you and me—always. I am going to tell you what was in that paper. It was an order I wrote over my own signature that an opposition oil refinery should be destroyed."

"Heavens!" Philip exclaimed. "A crime! Ah, that is why my mother left you!"

He hurled his face in his hands and moved toward Margaret at the closed door.



CLEVELAND MOFFETT

"We were desperate," went on the father. "Our whole business future depended on our getting control of the field. We had to remove that opposition. We tried to buy them out. We made them generous offers, but that stubborn fool Lawrence"—

Margaret rushed forward.

"Stop!" she cried. "You are speaking of my father."

"I beg your pardon," said Haggleton simply.

The words of his beloved had torn down the last veil that hung between Philip's eyes and the secret. His mother—the crime. Margaret! Ah, yes, retribution and the sins of the fathers!

He staggered a little, groping blindly for support.

"Her father," he moaned, "and I am this man's son."

Haggleton decided swiftly.

"There is no use making this out worse than it is," he said coldly. "I am sorry for what I did. I will do whatever you think is right in the matter."

"Whatever I think is right?" asked Philip in surprise. He thought a moment deeply, then asked:

"How much were you worth when you committed this crime—a million—half a million?"

"Possibly. But what is your idea in asking me that?"

"I thought," replied Philip reflectively, "that we might consider some part of your fortune as honestly earned and give back the rest."

"To whom?"

"To those who earned it—the people."

"Have you any idea how rich I am?"

"You are to keep half a million. The rest you will give back."

"Do you think that I will do such a crazy thing?" shouted Haggleton.

Philip remained unmoved.

"I am not setting myself up, as you judge, but I can't dispose of my life and decide about my conduct. And I tell you that I will not be known as the consenting son of a man whose riches have come from a crime. You can keep all your fortune; you need not give back a penny of it, but you cannot have me under the same roof with you."

"I thought you a son to be proud of!" Haggleton shouted. "I worked hard to gain your confidence and affection, but you are a prig and a fool! I came down here and lived with you. I was ready to learn from you, and all that you have taught me is that you are just as ignorant and selfish as all reformers!"

The millionaire turned to Margaret.

"If you were not selfish," he said, with ominous calm, "you would follow that boy through anything—through weakness, through wickedness. The worse the father the closer you would stick to the son."

He paused a moment.

"But you are a reformer," he went on, with infinite scorn. "He is tempted by money, and you clear your skirts of him as my wife did of me. He can go to the devil if he likes. Heavens, girl, if that's the way saints love give me sinners!"

"Don't speak to her like that!" commanded Philip.

"No? Very well, then, I will speak to you. You have had the greatest opportunity a foolish dreamer ever wasted. Go tell your starving tenement friends that John J. Haggleton offered them $10,000,000, and you refused it for them!"

He looked around the room, took up his hat and concluded, with a dry laugh in his throat:

"And this is the end of the experiment!"

Moran, half drunk, insane with rage and grief, rushed in, dragging behind him his daughter in her cheap finery, terrified and looking ghastly under the paint on her cheeks.

"Now, then," he thundered, "you waits! I found her in that Tenderloin dive. There is more of your devil's work, Jackson!"

"You're crazy!"

"Who made me crazy?" bellowed Moran. "John J. Haggleton did! He ruined my little business in the west; he killed my wife in this foul tenement of his! By the eternal, if I had him here I—I would show him."

Haggleton turned upon him.

"Well, show me," he challenged. "I am Haggleton!"

Moran's hand dived with lightning quickness into his pocket.

"Father! Look out!—Oh!" The warning cries came from Jenny, from Philip, from Margaret, but before Gentle, who stood nearest the half insane man, could grasp him the pistol flashed, was leveled and—

"Philip! My son!" cried Haggleton, for the young man had flung himself before his father and received the bullet in his chest.

"My son!" cried Haggleton again, gathering him in his arms and lowering him to the ground. The old diver, Jenny and Margaret crowded around the father on his knees over the prostrate form of his son.

Haggleton looked up at them.

"This is your gratitude," he said pathetically to Gentle. "He risked his life for me!" There was triumph in the voice that addressed Margaret.

"Thank God, my son!" cried Haggleton, like a man."

And, rising, he exulted:

"I told you that nothing could keep us apart. It is the call of the blood! Now he is mine, mine! I am going to take him home!"

His voice broke as he added:

"My boy! My boy! My little boy!"

He stooped down and kissed the forehead of his unconscious child.

CHAPTER XIX.

MARGARET UNVANQUISHED.

THERE followed weeks of pain and anxiety in the great Haggleton mansion in Fifth avenue. Meantime Philip was passing through a moral as well as a physical crisis. In his weakness and suffering, in the long restless nights when his mind wandered in incoherent mutterings, in his days of increasing strength and courage, in every moment of wakefulness or half wakefulness, there was present before him, vaguely or distinctly, this one thought, that a sudden and tremendous responsibility had been placed upon him. What course should he decide upon? Here were dreams of his eager youth in the way of amazing realization.

And this stern, worldly man, dreaded by thousands, envied by millions—this great lord of taskmasters in whose hands lay all power over toiling multitudes—here he was, this richest man in America, Philip's own father, ready and eager to please him with untold benefactions, to do good instead of evil, to make amends for—for the past as he had vowed in tender, broken words at that tortured bedside while he waited and hoped and possibly prayed (if Haggleton could pray) that his son's life might be spared him.

He would tear down "lung block," and he would put aside several millions for immediate steps toward solving that problem and several millions more for miscellaneous charities in which his son might be interested. In short, Philip would have at least $10,000,000 at his disposal in a campaign of practical reform. Ten million dollars!

Margaret had nursed him with a sort of passionate intensity.

Philip assumed that the catastrophe had wiped out the past, that the obstacle which had risen between them had been leveled by it. Her evasive answers when he spoke of their coming marriage worried him a little, but her professional assertion that for the present his mind must be set first of all upon his recovery reassured him in a measure.

Her mind was fully made up. No she could not bring herself to marry the son of a man who had destroyed and in a way disgraced her father.

She loved Philip, loved him in spite of this hateful relationship. She would have married him joyfully as Philip Ames, a man of the people; she would have married him in poverty, in obscurity, in sickness, in anything except his present state.

Her relations with the old millionaire were difficult. He spoke to her as little as possible. Yet it was unavoidable that time and again they should stand side by side watching over the patient when the fever rose and his chances of recovery seemed doubtful.

It was then that they listened together to his delirious mutterings in which his love for her, his admiration and affection for him, his reverence for his mother's memory, his perplexity over the wrong committed, were intermingled.

She began to like Haggleton, to admire the unvarying readiness of resource, the determination and efficiency that always were at his service in the sickroom, as they had been in the marts of men and in Moran's tenement.

Haggleton was fighting his final battle. He had conquered Philip, Gentle, Joe Caffrey, Jenny, Moran even, repentant in his cell awaiting trial. Now he was seeking to conquer Margaret.

Gentle had long since surrendered to the enemy, gone over to his camp, bag and baggage, his armoner already, marveling every day at the way Haggleton had of making every one of his preliminary gifts to the poor yield its hundred per cent of benefit. Jenny had been provided for. Haggleton had seen to this too.

And the bakery trust, forgotten now flourished. It was selling better bread and cheaper bread to the whole east side. Joe Caffrey had found himself there. He was in temporary charge of the offices in Moran's transformed rooms. "If you want to make a lazy man hustle give him a job bossing somebody else," Haggleton had said laughingly to Gentle.

Thus three weeks passed, weeks of diminishing anxiety. Philip had been declared out of danger and was to make his first appearance at the dinner table that night. Margaret's service as a nurse had come to an end. She must make her final choice.

Haggleton left her alone with him, in his usual mental attitude of preparedness for whatever might happen, hoping that he had won her for Philip and Philip for himself, yet doubtful and ready to do battle to the very last.

Haggleton talked with Gentle in the library. He turned to the large picture of his wife and their infant son over the mantelpiece and looked at it.

"You have recovered your son, Mr. Haggleton," Gentle said, with reassuring conviction. "Philip answered the call of the blood, as you said he would. He loves you."

"Yes, he loves me. That's the great, precious fact—my boy loves me. But he knows this girl, too, and she won't change. I have watched her all these weeks while she has been nursing Philip. The doctor says that he owes his life to her devotion, but—no, she won't change; she can't forget."

"She can forgive."

"I doubt it, and I don't blame her. I like her. She has narrow ideas, but she holds to them hard. I'd rather have a person strongly wrong than weakly right."

"She will never leave Philip now," persisted Gentle.

Charlevoix Local Social meets every alternate Monday at Engmen's hall, foot of Bridge street Everyone welcome.

20 1f By Order of Local.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The following are extracts from the report given by Mrs. S. J. Wood, delegate to the State convention W. C. T. U., held at Port Huron the week of June 7, at the meeting of the meeting of the local union held last Friday.

The convention was opened by a consecration service led by the state evangelist, Mrs. Leona F. Fieldworth one hundred and thirty seven delegates registered. The rest of the afternoon was taken up with the appointment of committees. The evening program consisted of all of musical exercises, music, welcome and responses and the introduction of district vice-presidents, when districts had made a net gain of one hundred or more for the year. Three districts were the 3, 8 and 12. The net gain for the state was one thousand three hundred and nine.

Wednesday morning came reports of departments of work. S. J. [illegible] by Mrs. Humphrey, who said: "He who helps a child helps humanity, and told of a schoolkeeper giving prizes to boys according to the drinks sold. Miss Clara Wheeler, superintendent of Kindergarten and Physical Education urged us to use our influence against the so called comic supplements of our dailies and to protest strongly against The Yellow Kid etc., a menace to the morals of the young. Other reports received were Sunday School work, anti-narcotics, school savings banks and medal contests. A motion was carried, to place a picture of Miss Willard in the Port Huron public schools. This is done at every state convention.

Mrs. Calkins gave her annual address which was fine, followed by the reports of the field workers were very interesting. There was a loss of ninety in the eleventh district, Mrs. Howard gave a good paper, the Charlevoix Union being the only one mentioned. Mrs. Calkins asked us, when voting were for or against local option or statewide prohibition, and the delegates said statewide. It was decided to spend in own money, instead of paying it in the hands of the anti saloon league. Hon. Eugene Foss, prohibition candidate for president, 1908, at this time received a warm welcome, after which came the election of officers, Mrs. Calkins receiving 193 votes, Mrs. Howard is our delegate to the National convention to be held in Detroit this fall. Thursday afternoon several papers were given and in the evening Mr. Chalin gave an address. Friday was taken up with reports and addresses. Mrs. Whitney spoke on rescue and juvenile work at the last.

Mrs. Whitney said it will take a whole generation and more to eradicate the effects of the saloon, and when liquor is banished we still have the gambling dens to fight, and the gambling devices in supposedly decent places where the children gamble to get candy. He denounced the cheap theatre, said it is a crime to throw on the canvas any picture of crime. Seven boys were sent to Lansing for committing a robbery just as they had seen it in a moving picture show, spoke of maintaining a high school team to travel around and how they bet on the teams until every little lad will bet his last 25c, spoke of the indecent dancing which is permitted on fair grounds and at Fourth of July celebrations. The girls at Niles and Adrian have got to where they are a menace to society. A mother asked her what she thought of the high school dance and also asked if it would be advisable to let her daughter go. Mrs. Whitney asked, "What time does the girl come in?"

"Oh! I don't know, about eleven o'clock, I think."

"And do you not sit up until she comes?"

"Oh! no," replied the mother, "I get too tired."

Mrs. Whitney said, "Well I tell you the time has come when no mother should go placidly to sleep and let 14 and 15 year old daughter on the streets exposed to its awful perils. Some terrible things have happened to girls through the white slave traffic.

The meeting closed with a grand international rally, participated in by the convention and the Union from Canada.

HINTS ON SAFE BATHING.

How to Overcome Dangers In Fresh and Salt Water.

The great majority of the accidents in connection with bathing are due to readily preventable causes and are often entirely the result of gross carelessness or gross ignorance.

Take, for example, one of the most dreaded causes of bathing accidents and fatalities—the cramp. Now, cramp, as a rule, is merely the result of indigestion, and it has been brought on in the water owing to the fact that the bather has rushed off almost immediately after a meal, and the violent exercise, combined with the shock of the plunge into cold water, produces the indigestion, which in turn produces cramp.

Even when cramp manifests itself it often happens that it is not cramp which drowns the bather, but his loss of presence of mind. As long as you keep your head above water and do not swallow deep drafts of it you are all right. With regard to cramp, if you are near shore strike out for it boldly, whatever the pain. If the cramp is in the [illegible] you [illegible] sunset ashore with your legs. If, however the legs are [illegible] and this [illegible] the [illegible] but only one leg [illegible] [illegible] those then turn on your back [illegible] [illegible] backward. Fight out [illegible] [illegible] as hard as you can [illegible] [illegible] the cramped spot, as far as the calf, as hard as ever you can.

Above all, don't mind the cramp, but work the leg for all you are worth, and the pain will soon disappear and stand [illegible] [illegible] of water. First one has often been observed in the water by an expert swimmer.

Another common danger of bathing comes from strong tides or high waves, and in nearly every accident the bather has taken improper risks. It cannot be too strongly impressed on even good swimmers that to swim out on a falling tide is a most risky performance. If you are accompanied by a boat, well and good, but if not the tide has a trick of getting stronger as the water deepens, and the difficulty of returning increases every yard you swim.

As to those who cannot swim or who can swim only a few strokes, an old and expert swimmer's advice is that one should never, even in calm weather, go out into the armpits and play about at that depth. The slightest motion of the water at that depth will carry you off your legs and as often as not into deeper water. On a shelving shore the weight of the body will be naturally thrown forward into deeper water. Such persons should never wade out deeper than their chests, and then they should immediately turn around, face to the shore and strike out for it.

It is really quite easy to propel yourself toward the shore even if you cannot swim. In many cases the act of throwing your body forward will place you in safety, and if at the same time you scoop the water toward you with hollowed hands you may travel in three seconds some seven or eight feet. If at the same time you give a vigorous kick with your legs—with both legs, if possible—you will move a considerable distance before you suffer your first immersion. But the chief thing to remember is that you should turn toward the shore the moment the water comes up to your chest and in no case go out even to that depth when the water is rough.

Again, you should never bathe, if in the least delicate, upon an empty stomach before breakfast. The ideal time is between two and three hours after that meal, when your food is fairly well digested.

Yet another serious risk which is common to all who bathe in rivers is danger from weeds. If you should find your legs entangled in weeds—a most dangerous situation, which is rendered more dangerous because of its effect on the mind remember this: The only way to rid yourself of weeds is to stretch your body and legs out quietly as far as you can, pull the water to you with hollowed hands and at the same time make several very short but rapid strokes with your legs. The combined effect of this action is almost always to free you from the weeds.

Above all, learn at once to float. It will get you out of many a difficulty. Given these precautions, ninety-nine people out of every hundred can bathe in warm weather with safety and benefit.

[illegible] OF MUSIC.

How to Enjoy It by Following a Little Sound Advice.

Keep your ears open for new harmonies and your heart open for new personalities is the best way to appreciate music. The harmonies may sound harsh at first, as our sweetest harmonies sounded harsh to older times and sound harsh to the Chinese today. The new personalities may seem erratic and crazy at first, as Beethoven and Wagner and Monteverde and Gluck seemed in their day.

But keep your mind hospitable. If you read that Soandso is stingy or that he drinks too much or dresses too extravagantly, or not extravagantly enough do not be misled into confusing the artist with his work. It is pitiful that these things must be true, but "The Messiah" is no less great because Handel was an outrageous glutton, "Don Giovanni" is no less wonderful because of Mozart's personal weakness. "The Creation" is no less inspired because Papa Haydn was so [illegible] [illegible] with his wife. The Nibelungen is no less the [illegible] [illegible] Dutch Wagner who treated his [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] for the other kick, the [illegible] the empty, the tawdry compositions whose names are now forgotten were no more great because their composers may have been far more scholarly, far more gentlemanly, sometimes far more popular and prosperous than the great masters. A man's personal vices and virtues are for him to carry with him to another judgment than the artistic tribunals of posterity. Let history or biography deal with the workman; art deals with the work.

So remember that great music is being written today and will be written tomorrow and be ready for it with a welcoming mind. Despise nothing because it is new nor yet because it is old. Judge a thing by itself, asking simply "Has it meaning? What is it trying to say? How effectively, how sincerely, with what novelty, is it said?"

Remember that the greatest works ever written were once mere novelties whose sires were fathers trembled in anxiety. Remember that at the next concert you attend your fellow neighbor may sneer or slumber at some work which will be glorious when he and you and the sons of your sons' sons are dust. Rupert Hughes in Delineator For May.

Edison's Storage Battery Tested.

A test of Thomas A. Edison's storage battery car was recently made at West Orange, N. J., says the Scientific American. The car is twenty-six feet long and weighs five tons. It was fitted with two seven and one-half horsepower motors, and the operating cost is estimated at 1 cent a mile. During the test the car was operated at a speed of twenty miles per hour. The motors are operated at 110 volts, and it is claimed that a run of 150 miles can be made without recharging the batteries.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for testimonials.

In discussing Eleventh district politics, the Grand Rapids Herald says: "Congressman Dodds will undoubtedly receive a unanimous republican renomination in the Eleventh Michigan district this fall. On the Democratic side, democrats in the upper country of the district are strongly urging Prof. W. N. Ferris of Big Rapids. If his consent is not given, however, the democratic discussion centers about A. J. Lacy of Clare or Mayor Withrbi of Traverse City."

Auditor General Fuller states that all the telephone companies in the state have complied with the order of the U. S. district court at Grand Rapids and paid in the taxes which they say they owe the state under the repealed specific tax law. An order requiring the payment before proceeding with the case against the ad. valorem tax law, was made by the court. The companies paid in $137,981.80 this year as compared with $124,000 last year, voluntarily increasing their taxes this amount.

Auditor General Fuller has deeded to the land department 4,058 lots in Roscommon county as tax homestead lands. These are a part of the lands platted by Chicago speculators as "resort sites" and the buyers found them worthless and quit paying taxes. The lots were deeded to the land department to prevent the speculators buying them in at tax sales and operating an endless chain system. The state expended about $400 in advertising the taxes. The land sold originally for less than $3 per acre.

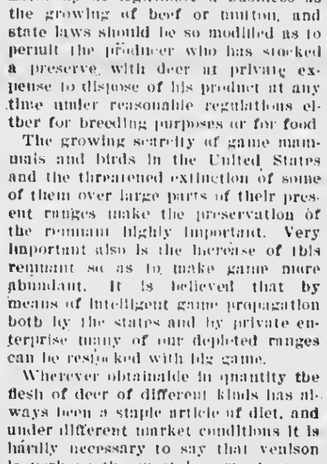
VENISON FOR PROFIT.

Government Officials Think Farmers Could Rear Deer Successfully.

In "Deer Farming in the United States," a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture, the economic possibilities of raising deer and elk in the United States are discussed. It is believed that when the restrictions now imposed by state laws are removed, says the bulletin, this business may be made an important and highly profitable industry, especially since it will be the means of utilizing much otherwise unproductive land. The raising of venison should be and is naturally as legitimate a business as the growing of beef or mutton, and state laws should be so modified as to permit the producer who has stocked a preserve with deer at private expense to dispose of his product at any time under reasonable regulations either for breeding purposes or for food.

The growing scarcity of game mammals and birds in the United States and the threatened extinction of some of them over large parts of their present ranges make the preservation of the remnant highly important. Very important also is the increase of this remnant so as to make game more abundant. It is believed that by means of intelligent game propagation both by the states and by private enterprise many of our depleted ranges can be restocked with big game.

Wherever obtainable in quantity the flesh of deer of different kinds has always been a staple article of diet, and under different market conditions it is hardly necessary to say that venison is perhaps the most important game, being a favorite with epicures and also having a wide use as a substitute for beef and mutton, which meats it resembles in texture, color and general characteristics. Its flavor is distinctive, though it suggests mutton rather than beef. In chemical composition it is very similar to beef, though, judging from available data, it is not so fat as still fed cattle. The following figures show how it compares with beef and mutton: A lean venison roast before cooking has been found to contain on an average 75 per cent of water, 20 per cent of protein or nitrogenous material and 2 per cent of fat; a lean beef rump, some 65 to 70 per cent of water, 20 to 23 per cent of protein and 5 to



— ROCKY MOUNTAIN ELK.

14 per cent of fat, and a lean leg of mutton, 67 per cent of water, 19 per cent of protein and 13 per cent of fat.

Venison, beef and other common meats are very thoroughly digested whatever the method of cooking. Venison may be roasted, broiled, pan broiled or used for making stews in much the same way as beef. It should be eaten as soon as possible.

The general popularity of venison is so great and the demand for it so widespread that overproduction is improbable. The other products of the deer—skins and horns—are of considerable importance, and in countries where deer are abundant and especially where large herds are kept in semidomestication the commerce in both is very extensive.

A number of species of the deer family have been proved to be susceptible to domestication. The reindeer, however, is the only one that has been brought fully under the control of man. The fact that the European red deer and the fallow deer have been bred in parks for centuries without domestication does not prove that they are less susceptible to the process than the reindeer. The purposes for which they have been held captive and the environment given them have been markedly different. It must be remembered also that few attempts have been made to rear and domesticate deer under intelligent management. The work has been largely a matter of chance experiment. If they had been as long under careful management as cattle they would now probably be equally plastic.

Re raising deer for profit does not necessarily imply their complete domestication. They may be kept in large preserves with surroundings as nearly natural as possible and their domestication entirely ignored. Thus the breeder may reap nearly all the profit that could be expected from a domestic herd, while the animals assume most of the dangers incident to close captivity. But the breeder who aims at the ultimate domestication of the animals and whose herd approaches nearest to true domesticity will in the end be most successful.

ASPARAGUS CULTIVATION.

How to Make a Bed of the Edible Young Shoots.

Asparagus is a perennial herb cultivated for its edible young shoots. It is a rugged plant and will thrive under adverse conditions, but to obtain the succulent stalks needed for culinary purposes well drained, rich soil is absolutely necessary. The soil should be well mixed with rotted manures containing much nitrogen and potash.

Prepare the bed by plowing or spading deeply, beginning the work early and looking after the drainage problem carefully. Plants at least one year old should be obtained for this bed. They can be raised from seed, which is sown outdoors in April in drills one foot apart, the seed being covered about one-half inch. Plants suitable for transplanting the following spring may be easily grown this way, or roots may be obtained from one to three years old.

Set the plants in the permanent bed in furrows eighteen inches apart, the plants being the same distance apart in each furrow. Be careful to spread the roots out naturally and set each plant on a little mound of earth in the furrow. Cover at first to a depth of a few inches, gradually filling in as the season advances. In the fall cut back all the stocks to a level with the ground for the winter.

In the second year loosen the soil by shallow spading. When the first shoots appear the rows may be hilled up somewhat. Cut sparingly until the third year, as the plants will be more productive afterward.

How to Overcome Oily Hair.

A young woman who has tried all sorts of remedies to keep the oil out of her hair says she gets best results by using a shampoo made from pure olive oil soap in which a pinch of soda has been mixed. Cut a cake of soap into a quart of boiling water to make thick jelly when cold. This is bottled and kept for future use. Before shampooing take a couple of spoonfuls of this jelly, mix it with a pinch of soda and rub it well into the scalp, which has first been wet with hot water. Another way to apply the shampoo mixture to the scalp is to part the hair in strands and rub it on with a toothbrush or small nailbrush. After the scalp and long hair have been well washed they should be rubbed vigorously with the finger tips and thoroughly rinsed.

Snakes.

The holes commonly seen in the fields are not "snake holes," though commonly called such. They are made by field mice, shrews and moles, often by the larger insects, and it is very seldom that snakes even take refuge in them. Few snakes actually dig holes. They burrow in soft ground, the subterranean species, but these live, as a rule, in soft, yielding soil.—St. Nicholas.

Neighborhood Notes

Bert Belcher at Lretsville, has a Partridge Cochin hen that tips the scales at between 8 and 10 pounds, that certainly deserves the medal for mothering and covering a big flock of chicks. Belcher took 60 chickens from his incubator and intended to house them in his yard, but the big hen upset his plans completely by swiping the brood and proceeding to set up housekeeping of her own. It was a sight to see her spread her big wings and carefully cover every chick. It was a mighty big job to care for those 60 hungry mouths, but she is performing the job perfectly.—Kalkaskian.

The state of Michigan is still in the million-dollar class, according to the last monthly statement, which shows a balance on hand in the general fund of $1,508,502.87. During the month the Agricultural college drew out its college interest fund, which amounted to $23,109.49.

There remains a balance in the treasury credited to the primary school interest fund of $471,390.61, which will be increased an additional $111,000 by the addition of the taxes paid by the Michigan State Telephone company Thursday.

So far this year there has been paid from the general fund a grand total of $6,320,706.50. The primary school interest fund is not far behind however, as a total of $5,662,-650.96 has been paid from that fund to the various school districts in the state. Deputy John Haarer, of the treasurer's office, stated that Michigan will not be compelled to borrow money until some time in December, or perhaps not then, as the present condition of the treas-

Get at the cause—cure the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills will work the cure.
They're for the kidneys only—
Have made great cures in this locality.

Mrs. Nelson Burdo, 119 South B St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "For several years kidney complaint kept me in misery. I had severe backaches and pains through my loins and I always felt tired and weak. My rest was badly broken and I had terrible bearing-down pains across my kidneys. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I procured a box and in two weeks they improved my condition in every way. I am pleased to recommend this excellent preparation."

Mrs. Burdo gave the above testimonial in August 1906 and when interviewed in July 29, 1909 she added: "During the two years that have passed since I used Doan's Kidney Pills I have had no need of kidney medicine."

People in and about here were wondering why the price of eggs did not go lower this spring than about 18 cents. They usually go down to 15 and did several years ago sell as low as 12. The following dispatch from New York City telling of the storing of 15,000,000 of them may help the explanation:

"Forty million eggs have been shipped into this city since April 1 and placed in cold storage by the warehouse men, to remain there until the high prices of last winter are duplicated. The eggs come mostly from Indiana, Michigan and Ohio. They were purchased at an average price of from 23½ to 24 cents a dozen. Two cents a dozen is added to cover insurance, rents, storage, etc., which brings the total cost up to about 25 cents a dozen.

"If the eggs can be retailed in New York next winter at 45 cents a dozen, which is very fetched last winter, there will be a profit of 19 cents a dozen, or a total of over $700,000."

In case spray is used for late summer baths on hot days as well as on open and animals. In addition to supplying the bushes with needed moisture the applying of the shower bath under good pressure will keep the leaves and flowers free from most of the slugs, red spiders and aphides which attack them.

While a big ado is made about the high cost of the necessaries of life, hardly a line is printed relative to expenditure in the United States alone of $1,000,000,000 annually for whiskey and beer, this total not including the additional enormous burden borne by taxpayers in the shape of criminal court expenses.

Twenty thousand acres of farm land in western Oklahoma are to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder each month of the present year. Maps giving location of tracts of land, together with descriptions and prices will be furnished any readers who address Dana H. Kelsey, superintendent, United States Indian service, Muskogee, Okla.

Whatever else may be said of the California grain grower, he is entitled to a measure of credit for the bit of sentiment he seems to show in leaving numerous live oaks in his fields, which show up in striking relief against the golden yellow of the ripening grain. While these trees make trouble for the plower and reaper, they add much to the beauty of the landscape for the passerby.

In buying a team with which one is not acquainted it is well not only to have from the owner a guarantee that they are sound, but that they will pull even and are not balky. Many a horse sound as a dollar in its legs and shoulders isn't worth a continental because of a screwing derangement of its brain cells, and this latter defect is often not apparent until the former owner has made good his share of his bargain.

The reason for deep early cultivation of the cornfield and shallow cultivation later lies in the fact that from the time the plants reach a height of a foot and a half they rapidly develop a root system which spreads out as well as down, comprising numerous fine roots which lie near the surface. The aim of the later cultivations should be to keep the surface of the soil mellow to prevent baking and a stoppage of circulation of air and moisture.

Now and then you come across a fellow who is always dickering and swapping—sometimes horses, sometimes vehicles and now and then machinery and other stuff. We have seen premises belonging to fellows of this stripe which were literally covered with trash of one kind and another, a good per cent of it being junk picked up at nearby auction sales. We have heard of chaps who swapped wives and kids, too, and the latter were doubtless glad of the change.

The nettle, while not a noxious weed in the same sense as quack grass or the Canada thistle, is hard to kill out because it multiplies by root stalk growth as well as by seed. The best way to dispose of a small patch is to dig up carefully to a good depth, collect all the loose roots, let them dry in the sun and burn them. In the course of a couple of weeks the patch should be dug over a second time, when any roots left in the ground will have begun to grow. These should likewise be removed and burned.

The pulling up of a dead stalk of corn in the fall gives but a faint idea of the extent of the plant's root system. Careful investigations show that instead of the roots being eight or ten inches long, as one might readily suppose from superficial examination, they run from five to eight feet in the average hill of corn. A knowledge of this fact should not only be helpful to the corn grower, but also to the orchardist who may use corn as a between row crop among little trees. The corn draws largely on the moisture of the soil and if planted too close to the trees will consume that which they should have for their best development.

If any of the [illegible] flowers or berry bushes should be attacked by mildew the matter may be remedied by sprinkling the leaves with flowers of sulphur, preferably when the dew is on, so that the powder will stick.

It is surprising how the shoving of the dog tax up from $1 to $3 per annum will alter people's ideas of the intrinsic value of members of the canine tribe. Hundreds of small towns need to have this test applied.

The young asparagus bed set last fall or this spring should not be neglected this season as all of the energy the plants can muster should be allowed to go toward the development of sturdy root systems. This will give a largely increased output of the vegetable another season.

When one finds himself under the necessity of borrowing tools or machinery fairness would seem to justify the payment of a nominal sum to the owner for the accommodation. This would but cover wear and tear and a small interest return on the money invested in such equipment.

If perchance samples of pills or other dope should be left at the back door it would be well to put the stuff in the garbage can or fire before the youngsters about the house get hold of it. Most of this peddled trash contains deadly poison, which will not only make a child sick, but kill it if in an overdose.

More than one housewife saves herself a world of hard work by having the men of the house put off their muddy boots and shoes before going into the kitchen or dining room. It takes a little time, but the reformation is appreciated by any fair minded man who will go down on his prayer bones and scrub the floor two or three times.

Recent feeding experiments conducted by the Massachusetts experiment station at Amherst in the matter of feeding calves meal and bean straw demonstrated that there is no great advantage in feeding the former unless it can be got at the same or a less price than bran. Analyses showed the bean to have a little larger protein content, while it was eaten by the cows more readily and resulted in manures of a considerably higher fertilizer value.

If any of our readers have been irrigated, as the writer has been, in the setting of fruit or shade trees, the fault may be remedied in part by a judicious watering, care being taken to see that the ground is mellowed shortly after the watering is done so as to prevent the formation of a crust about the tree, while the application of a shovelful of well rotted manure through which the rain or water artificially applied can soak is an excellent aid in enabling the tree to make up for the lost time.

A majority of the soothing syrups at present on the market and frequently used by tired mothers to quiet crying babies contain considerable quantities of morphine or cocaine, both of them deadly poisons, and many of the so-called cures for several drug habits contain the very drugs a craving for which these cures are supposed to relieve the drug victim of. Farmers' bulletin No. 333, put out a short time ago by the department of agriculture at Washington, goes very thoroughly into the subject of these death dealing nostrums. There should be one in every home.

Nature seems to have provided exceptional means for reducing the baby-hood—the helpless period—of the birds to a minimum, thereby decreasing the likelihood of their destruction by their several natural enemies. This safeguard lies chiefly in the enormous eating capacity of the newly hatched birds, three or four nestlings keeping both parent birds busy from daylight until dark stuffing their uplifted and gaping mouths. This large consumption of food results in a like prodigious and rapid growth and development, the young birds testing their wings in flight from the nest but a few short weeks after hatching.

Beyond treating dirt roads at the right time and keeping them well crowned so as to shed rainfall quickly there is probably no factor that will tend better to keep them in good condition than the use of broad tired wagons in place of the narrow tired ones which have been in so general use in the past. There is always a period when a road has been worked into shape, but has not been packed down hard, when a narrow tired wagon heavily loaded will undo much of the work. The same thing is true during rainy seasons, when the road, however well graded, becomes soft. Whatever the season, the broad tired wagon has a decided advantage over the narrow in keeping the roads in good condition.

Both the quality and quantity of the fruit from the average home garden strawberry bed could be greatly improved were the number of plants allowed to set for bearing reduced by half or more. This would give the plants remaining more room, more light, more fertility to draw on and would thus greatly increase their thriftiness and bearing capacity. Some of the best yields of strawberries on record have been made by beds in which the plants were set closely in the original bed, but allowed to send out no runners whatever, being cultivated according to the hill system, as it is usually known. It is too late now to help beds that are ready to bear, but the bed set this spring for fruiting next year can be so handled as to prevent this crowding and stunting of the plants, while beds that are bearing their first crop this season can be so thinned after the bed is renovated as to bring about the right conditions for next season. If the row system is to be followed in the new bed no more new plants should be allowed to take root than will comfortably fill the rows, each plant being allowed a space of seven or eight inches square.

"Nothing is inconceivable, Mr. Gentle, when a good woman thinks that she is fighting a bad man. A conscientious woman has no scruples."

"At any rate, she must speak out soon."

A servant entered.

"There's a person asking to see you, sir," he announced. "He says his name is Joe Caffrey. There is another person with him, a woman."

"It's Jenny," said Gentle in an undertone. "They want to plead for Moran, I guess. His case comes up next week."

"Show them both in."

"How was Moran when you last saw him in the Tombs?" asked the millionaire.

"Sincerely sorry for what he did. When I told him what you have done for Jenny he broke down."

"I'll see that he is dealt with leniently. After all, his mad act was prompted by a father's love, like mine."

The servant opened the door again and admitted Joe Caffrey, followed timidly by Jenny.

SUCCULENT LAMB FEED.

Gains May Be Realized When Cheap Corn Is Available.

Recent experiments brought out the fact at a government station that with corn at ordinary prices cheaper gains on lambs may be made with dry feed than with roots or silage.

When corn and silage are low in price the gains made with silage are a little cheaper than those made with dry feed. The largest total gains were made by the lambs getting sugar beets, and the finish of this lot was also a little better. The lot getting turnips and cabbage required the largest amount of dry matter for each 100 pounds gain. Silage and dry feed came next.

The least amount of dry matter was required where sugar beets and mangels were fed. The chief objection to mangels and sugar beets is the large amount of hand labor required to raise them.

Clerical Slips.

An English preacher, discoursing upon Bunyan and his works, caused a flutter among his hearers by exclaiming, "In these days, my brethren, we want more Bunyans!"

Another clergyman, pleading earnestly with his parishioners for the construction of a cemetery for their parish, asked them to consider "the deplorable condition of 50,000 Christian Englishmen living without Christian burial."

Still more curious was this clerical slip. A gentleman said to a minister:

"When do you expect to see Deacon S——?"

"Never," said the reverend gentleman, hotly. "The deacon is in heaven."—Pearson's Weekly.

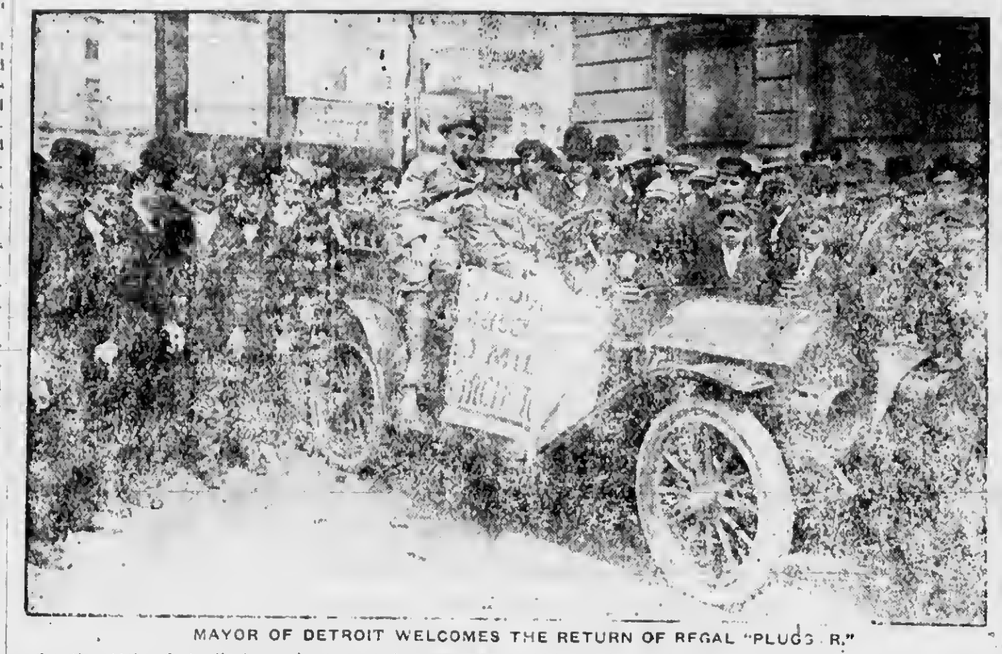
THE UNUSUAL TOUR OF AN ODDLY NAMED AUTOMOBILE



MAYOR OF DETROIT WELCOMES THE RETURN OF REGAL "PLUGGER"

On the 11th of April, last, there started from Detroit, on a 5,000-mile tour, an automobile which had already made a name for itself. This car bears the extraordinary name of the "Plugger." It was built by the Regal Motor car company of the City of the Straits, and it will be recalled that last year an automobile, for the first time in the history of the world "cut of the road," traveled from the York to San Francisco in the summer's short time of thirty days. The "Plugger" was the car that accomplished this feat. This transcontinental tour, in 1909, was undertaken largely in the interests of good roads, and much good was accomplished.

Again, in the interests of better highways, this car was sent out this year on the 5,000-mile tour. For the sake of a name, the trip was called the "Around-the-Circle" tour. The route, as laid out, was from Detroit to New York by way of Boston, thence west as far as Oklahoma City. The route there angled north to Lincoln and Omaha, Neb., thence in a northeasterly direction to Minneapolis, across to Milwaukee down the western shore of Lake Michigan to Chicago, and thence back to Detroit, arriving home on Saturday, June 25.

Considering the season of the year when this trip was undertaken, and the cold weather and heavy rainfall throughout the country the month of April, one can readily realize that the roads were in a very poor conditions. The car was in charge of two enthusiastic Detroit young men, R. W. Dean and Lee Cusop. The route was laid out to "a schedule of time. It was determined that in order to give the "Plugger" its fullest tests, and demonstrate to the public that even present-day roads in bad conditions could be negotiated, it must reach the cities of its itinerary on specified days. The car was entirely successful in carrying out this undertaking. Accidents, as would naturally be expected, were many. Oftimes the car became stalled in the mud and on several occasions it was forced to a halt by ditch, and sand and rock were likewise unexpected obstacles that came to the stranded travelers, Dean and Cusop, who drove the car.

The departure of the "Plugger" from Detroit was an exceedingly auspicious one. Many people were on hand to see it leave, including several municipal officials and the mayor. The latter was the last to shake hands with the two young men and wish them Godspeed and a successful journey.

The reception accorded the "Plugger" and these young men all along the route has been quite as auspicious as their departure. Automobile enthusiasts in the large cities with their autos usually assembled and went forth to welcome the "Plugger." This invariably resulted in a parade on their return to town. Banquets and speechmaking occasions, too, were numerous—all in the interests of good roads and better traveling facilities for the automobile, whose popularity is ever-increasing.

The return of the car to Detroit was attended by a reception that by far surpassed any accorded it along the route. A great turnout of 150 automobiles laden with enthusiasts went forth to the city limits, accompanied by bands and city dignitaries. Mayor Breitmeyer, being the last to bid the young travelers goodby, was the first to receive them on their return. A parade and reception was the completion of this extraordinary trip.

Mr. Dean tells of many an interesting experience that fell to the lot of himself and Mr. Cusin during the journey.

"There is one honor which came to us," said Mr. Dean, "the theme of which I highly cherish. In the little town of Bethlehem, Pa., there is an inn called the Sun Inn that was built in the year 1728. It is on the main pike between two of the larger cities, and in the early days was the route over which stage coaches [illegible] on their way between these cities. Passengers, being guests of the little inn at times were such notables as Washington, Lafayette, Thomas Jefferson and other distinguished patriots. The inn is filled with curious and antique furniture made in early days. One of the most highly prized pieces of furniture is a bed of ancient type which on several occasions was occupied by Washington and by Lafayette.

"Mr. Cusop and myself, being guests of honor, were permitted, the night of our stop at this inn, to occupy this bed. As for comfort, I cannot say that it counts for much, for we were deuced tired after a long day's run over some very rocky roads, hence we slept without much thought concerning our forefathers.

"On our arrival at Louisville, Ky., the "Plugger" was driven to the Churchill Downs race track, where races were in progress. A big crowd was in attendance, and the presence of the "Plugger" immediately aroused the curiosity of the gathering, and the management insisted that the "Plugger" be driven twice around the track. Whether it was the appearance of the car, it is hard to say, but one ambitious steed, on seeing the "Plugger," broke from his rider and dashed clear around the track before he could be captured, much to the enjoyment of the spectators.

The "Plugger" bears every evidence of its long journeys. Travel-stained and worn bare of paint, it arouses curiosity wherever seen. But aside from this, it bears an appearance of uniqueness, owing to the fact that wherever it has gone he who cared to has been permitted to have his name card or "sign" thereon. As a result it is bedecked from radiator to tail light with tags, stickers, signs and writings, much resembling the decorations of a Saratoga trunk that has seen service in foreign lands.

PLEA FOR THE TOAD.

Indiana Entomologist Says Little Frog Eats Bad Insects.

B. W. Douglass, state entomologist for Indiana, who is the bitter foe of every insect that lives on the fruit and foliage of the state and the friend of every agent that tends to destroy such pests, is out with a plea to the farmers and gardeners to protect the American toad, or Mr. Bufo Americana, to be explicit. In making laws to protect insect eating birds, observes Mr. Douglass, no one has ever proposed to prevent legally the enthusiastic small boy from killing as many toads as he cares to. The plea will appear in the annual report from the entomological department, which has gone to the state printer and which Mr. Douglass hopes to have in the hands of a large number of farmers and gardeners by the time early spring preparations begin for the 1910 crops.

"As a matter of fact," says Mr Douglass, "the common toad does more to rid our fields and gardens of noxious insects than many of the feathered songsters of which we hear so much but shady that he is ugly—emphatically and most unmistakably ugly—the toad has all manner of defamation and libel heaped upon him.

"Early superstitions have charged the toad with about all the vicious qualities possible for one creature to possess. Some of these traditions, however, are of such a nature as to render the toad an individual to be avoided rather than to be sought and killed. But in spite of his ugliness, the little animal is about as harmless as any we can find in our woods and fields, and as a destroyer of insects his value has been established beyond a doubt. Ninety-eight per cent of the food of the toad consists of animal matter, and of this the greater part is injurious insects."

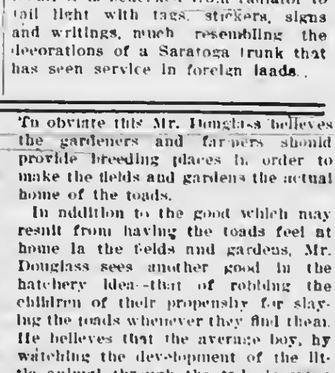
Mr. Douglass advances the idea that farmers and gardeners should provide artificial ponds or water places in their fields and gardens where the toad may breed. The little animal possesses the home instinct and when taken from the ponds or creeks and placed in a garden or field is likely to desert his new quarters and return to the old. To obviate this Mr. Douglass believes the gardeners and farmers should provide breeding places in order to make the fields and gardens the actual home of the toads.

In addition to the good which may result from having the toads feel at home in the fields and gardens, Mr. Douglass sees another good in the hatchery idea—that of robbing the children of their propensity for slaying the toads whenever they find them. He believes that the average boy, by watching the development of the little animal through the tadpole stage to that of the adult toad, will soon have a scientific interest in the toad which will insure it life and protection. This protection, the entomologist observes, is something the farmer and gardener cannot afford to disregard in these days of constant and rapid increase of insects which prey upon farm and garden products.

OUR 1909 BUMPER CROP.

How It Would Look In Bulk Alongside a City Skyscraper.

Last year's crops in America, while not establishing a record, were considerably in excess of the previous year. The corn was the bulkiest of the products. Next to corn came the production of oats with a huge total of nearly



OUR BUMPER 1909 CROP.

[illegible] a billion bushels, while wheat came next, sufficient to supply every man, woman and child in this country with a loaf and a half of bread per day.

The United States fed the world in the production of corn.

The previous year Russia's oat production was greater, but last year's estimate was 176,000,000 bushels more for the United States than that of 1908.

Dairy Profits.

Profits in dairying do not depend so much upon the number of cows kept, but upon the kind. This fact is being realized more and more as the dairy industry increases. One way to increase the acreage of a farm is to increase the fertility of the soil of the farm. Similarly one way to increase a dairy herd is to increase the cows' producing power.

An Aged Hen.

At Hazelhurst, Mass., there was buried with appropriate ceremonies by Mrs. Miles Tannon and her children their favorite hen, Polly, seventeen years old. She was believed to be the oldest hen in the world. According to Polly's owner, she laid more than 3,000 eggs and raised thirty-five broods of chickens.

Dairy Products of France.

France possesses 70,000,000 head of cattle, worth $800,000,000, and the industries of raising them and their products, such as milk, cheese and butter, maintain about half the population of France.

BANQUET WAS GRAND SUCCESS

First Annual of Charlevoix County Republican Club.

AT EAST JORDAN LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

Dodds, Kelley and Pattengill Were All Present.

Old Officers are Re-elected. Next Meeting Will Probably be Held in This City. Candidates all Present.

The first annual banquet of the Charlevoix county Republican club held at East Jordan Friday night, demonstrated that Charlevoix Republicans are alive and that the passing of the convention system in no way prevents the gathering of the clans and the mingling together of those who have the best interests of the party at heart.

The credit for the success of this—the first annual banquet must also in overflowing measure, be given to President McMillan and Secretary Robbins who worked unceasingly to make the banquet what it was—unsurpassed by any similar gathering in Michigan.

Early in the evening the business meeting was held and the old officers were re-elected. The president, secretary and executive committee were authorized to act for the club in all matters of importance, which might arise. The next meeting will probably be held in this city. After the business session the crowd assembled in the new dining room of the Russel house, which was opened for the first time, and was most beautifully decorated for the occassion.

President McMillan called to order and Rev. A. D. Grigsby pronounced the invocation, after the which the guests enjoyed the banquet proper, which was perfect. During the banquet, music was furnished by the Metropole orchestra.

Hon. W. J. Pearson introduced the toastmaster, Hon. J. M. Harris, who seemed inspired with the spirit of the occasion, and was at his best. The first speaker introduced, Hon. Francis H. Dodds—our congressman—who made his first appearance before a Charlevoix county audience since he entered our service, received an enthusiastic welcome, which showed how warm a place Mr. Dodds has won in our hearts. Briefly Mr. Dodds traced the history of our tariff legislation and its effect on our industries and, in conclusion, said that conditions were as good now as they ever had been and that our officials stand ever ready to do what was right.

S. A. Martin, of this city, sang "The Sword of Bunker Hill," after which Michigan's premier campaigner—Pat Kelley—who is always a favorite talker anywhere in Michigan, spoke on Republicanism. Mr. Kelley was at his best, and in his well known manner, spoke of the growth and greatness of this, our native estate, concluding with a splendid and eloquent tribute to the Republican party.

The last speaker, Hon. H. R. Pattengill, kept his hearers in roars of laughter by his many pointed stories. The whole speech showed that higher ideals were present in public life today and the Republican party stood for progress.

Antrim and Emmet counties were well represented as well as our neighboring towns of Boyne City and Boyne Falls, but Charlevoix was away ahead in attendance, over one hundred and fifty from this city being in the city.

The two senatorial candidates, Scott of Alpena and Morrice of Harbor Springs, as well as candidates for the different county offices were met on every hand and we are ready to submit they are all good fellows and whoever wins the Republican party will have a ticket to stand by and work for.

TO THE REPUBLICAN ELECTORS OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for nomination for county clerk, on the Republican ticket, at the primary election to be held, Tuesday, September 6, 1910.

Lovelorn Buckley Butcher Offered to Do the Cooking on Hot Days.

Bubbling over with tenderness, a letter from Buckley in the northern part of Wexford county has been received by Miss E. Palma Lovgren, who is in Cadillac in the interests of The Fruit Belt. The letter in part follows:

"I am going into business this fall and want a partner. I am a butcher by trade and a cook, so you see you would not have to cook. You would not have to stand over a hot stove in hot summer days if you were my partner. You understand what I mean. Now if this does not suit you, please send it back. May be you know of some lady that would like a home. I have lived alone a long time and I am tired of it. Well, I have wrote enough for this time, so I will bid you goodbye, hoping to hear from you. If you are not a free lady, please send this back, as a man is apt to get into trouble."

Miss Lovgren was at first indignant and then saw the humorous side of the matter. The writer signed his name, but she does not remember meeting him when engaged in work in Buckley.—Cadillac Globe.

SCOTT LIKES CHARLEVOIX

What He Told His Home Folks After Visiting This County.

The Alpena News prints the following: "Frank D. Scott has returned from a preliminary trip about the twenty-ninth senatorial district. In speaking of Charlevoix, the new county in the district, Mr. Scott stated that this was his first visit there and he was delighted with the reception accorded him. He says he never met a finer lot of gentlemen. Charlevoix, which is directly across the state from Alpena has very beautiful and picturesque surroundings."

We can assure Mr. Scott that we are always glad to see him and if he is nominated we are sure we will be well represented in the senate next session.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION

Will Meet in Charlevoix August First to Elect Officers.

A meeting of the representatives of local option, from Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix was held at Charlevoix last Wednesday the 13th inst. At a meeting held two weeks previously of representatives from the same localities, the matter of the organization of a county local option committee was thoroughly discussed, resulting in the appointment of a committee to report a plan of organization to be considered at the adjourned meeting. The committee reported a plan which was taken up and discussed. After some changes, the plan, as presented, was adopted. Under this plan, the county committee will be composed of representatives from the different subdivisions of the county as follows: Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix shall be entitled to six representatives, Boyne Falls two, and each township in the county to one representative, the representatives in each case to be chosen by the local organization. August first was named as the day and Charlevoix as the place of the first meeting of the committee. In the meantime the different localities will choose their representatives and the county committee as thus constituted, will proceed to its organization by the election of officers and the appointment of proper standing committees.

And any person so operating any motor vehicle shall, at the intersection of a public highway, keep to the right of the intersection of the centers of such highways when turning to the right and pass to the right of such intersection when turning to the left.

Local authorities may, notwithstanding the provisions of this act, make, enforce and maintain such reasonable ordinances, rules or regulations concerning the speed at which motor vehicles may be operated in any park, parkway within a city or incorporated village, but it shall not be permitted a greater speed than is provided in this act, and as a condition thereto, such local authorities must, by signs at each entrance of such park and along said parkway, conspicuously indicate the rate of speed permitted or required, and may exclude motor vehicles from any cemetery or ground used for the burial of the dead.

Chase Osborn's Plan is Highly Commended

Agricultural Resources of State Should Be Brought to Attention of Homeseekers.

"Chase S. Osborn's idea of establishing a publicity bureau by the state for the purpose of calling the attention of homeseekers to the good farming lands in northern Michigan is a good one, and if it materializes ought to be of great benefit to the farming and business interests of the state," said a prominent business man at Lansing, last week.

"Michigan needs publicity. Our development associations have done a great deal to encourage the settlement of the cut-over lands, but these are sectional efforts and are carried on by subscriptions made by persons interested in the development. The state is and ought to be vitally interested in bringing the cut-over lands on the tax roll at increased valuations. We should not forget that while Michigan promises to become one of the greatest manufacturing states of the union we cannot neglect the agricultural development, so that the thousands employed in the cities can purchase the necessities of life at reasonable prices."

Chase S. Osborn in his speech at Greenville last fall came out strongly in favor of some method where will place the great agricultural resources of the state before the eyes of the homeseekers and return good American citizens with good American ideals within the boundaries of the state, instead of allowing the money to go to other states and to Canada. The Canadian government is very active in the western states trying to get settlers, and companies who are making a specialty of the business are to be found all over the west.

WRESTLING MATCH

Attended by Good Deal of People but was Well Pulled Off

The Wrestling match between Frank Burns and Jake Kruizenga at the Charlevoix theater last week Wednesday was not attended by more than fifteen people, who were mostly young boys.

Mr Burns was to throw Mr. Kruizenga three falls in one hour and if the latter should gain one fall, the former was to lose the match. Mr. Burns got a the first fall in five minutes by scissors hold, the second fall in ten minutes with the repetition of the first hold, and the third fall was gained in twelve minutes by a hammer and Nelson hold. Mr. Kruizenga was game throughout as he is a strong little fellow, but in this event was not in his class on the mat. The boys showed that they were professional wrestlers to the hand full of people and regret that the people of Charlevoix do not care for one of the most popular sports.

PEOPLE'S CANDIDATE FOR SENATOR

Will be in Charlevoix Thursday Afternoon, July 21.

HON. CHAS. E. TOWNSEND OF JACKSON

Life Has Been That of a Michigan Farmer Boy.

Valued and Trusted Lieutenant of Roosevelt. Advocate of Progressive Republicanism. A Man of the Present.

To-morrow, Thursday, July 21, Hon Charles E. Townsend of Jackson, Republican candidate for United States senator, will be in the city for a few hours. Mr. Townsend is making a tour of the state and, of course, his time is limited in each locality. Mr. Townsend particularly wants to meet as many as he can face to face and tell them why he asks their votes for the highest position within the gift of the people of Michigan but not being able to call on everybody he meets them more than half way and will visit every county in the state. In Charlevoix he will be at VanDelt Hall at two o'clock p. m. and asks you to meet him there and talk over the issues upon which he is making his campaign.

This is the first opportunity the people of Michigan have ever had to say whom they desired for United States senator and Mr. Townsend measures up to the standard which it seems the people would choose when given the power which has so long been denied them.

Mr. Townsend's life has been that of a typical farmer boy of Michigan. Born upon a Michigan farm he taught school and was elected register of his county. At the close of his service in that office he was admitted to the bar, and so gained the esteem of his fellow citizens that he was elected representative to congress and is now serving his fourth term. In congress Mr. Townsend is recognized as a leader and has accomplished more during his eight years of service than his opponent has in thirty.

Mr. Townsend is not able to go before the people backed by the power of the interests but does go before them on his record as a progressive Republican, who believes that Michigan should be represented by a senator from Michigan, and not by the senator from Rhode Island, Massachusetts or any other state but his own. He is a man who believes in the principles and motto and has been a valued supporter and trusted lieutenant of Ex-president Roosevelt and President Taft in their progressive policies. He is a man of today and not of yesterday and his election will be a triumph for the principle for which we have long contended, the election of senator by the people.

Lay aside your business cares and labor for an hour or so Thursday and come to Charlevoix, meet, talk with and listen to the people's candidate for senator, Charles E. Townsend of Jackson.

How to Cook a Coon.

In preparing to cook a coon see that the kernels have been thoroughly cut out of the arm pits, groins and from under the root of the tail after it has been skinned. Coons' kernels are similar to musk glands. The carcass should be hung up in the frost for two or three days to freeze by night and thaw by day until properly tendered and then parboiled and baked. Some use a dressing of bread, sage and onions; others use oysters and crackers; still others use sweet potatoes or persimmons. All use a basting rich in butter, red pepper and vinegar. A coon beyond all other flesh absorbs any other flavor put with him, so sweet herbs are occasionally used. Not too fat nor too lean, he makes a fine repast for a hunter's supper.

How to Pack Blouses.

When carrying several blouses in a suit case place them all on a padded coat hanger so that the width of the blouses will run along the length of the suit case. In this way the crease from folding will not come at the waist line and will not be seen when the blouse is worn. The hanger will be found useful at the journey's end since the blouses will be hung on it during the visit.

How to Save the Stickpin.

If the end of a stick pin is under a [illegible] inside the opening of the sleeve, anywhere that you can easily get at it, you will be in no danger of losing it if you will wind tightly about it a small [illegible] rubber band.

GO SLOW ON BROOM CORN.

High Price of Crop Tempting Many Farmers Into Untried Field.

The extremely high price of broom corn has aroused a widespread interest in the crop, says O. D. Center of the University of Illinois. Broom corn belongs to the same family as sorghum, Kaffir corn, milo maize and Jerusalem corn, all of which are classed botanically as Andropogon sorghum. It differs from the other members of this group in having the seed heads with much longer, straighter, stronger straws or branches. These form the brush, which is the valuable portion of the plant.

Broom corn growing now is and will always remain a small industry because the demand for the brush is not only limited, but small. This crop, then, is not a profitable one to include in a system of general farming. According to the best authorities, the world's consumption of brush is less than 50,000 tons, and as this brush is used but for one purpose there can be no sudden increase in the amount required. The total world's supply could be produced on 130,000 acres, and the territory and men equipped for and engaged in broom corn growing already could easily double the present production if the demand warranted.

Broom corn is marketed wholly in the bale. Throughout central Illinois there are numerous jobbers and commission men who do nothing but handle this crop. Because of dishonest practices in baling, large dealers and factory operators are cautious about buying except from established and reputable jobbers.

Because broom corn is selling for as high as $200 per ton many novices who are attracted by the high prices will plant extensively this season. Without a working knowledge of the requirements of the crop and without the special equipment necessary for its successful handling the result of this extensive planting will be an enormous overproduction of brush, much of which will be of very inferior quality.

It is seldom the man who undertakes a new line of business because of abnormally high prices who makes the money. It is the man who thoroughly learns a business and then sticks to it through high prices and low who comes out with the dollar. This being true, we must say that this is not a favorable time to embark in the business of broom corn production.

Plowing Twice For Crop.

Sod land is very good for almost all crops if the season is seasonably wet and other conditions are favorable. One of the worst troubles with corn in sod land is that the cutworms living in the sod destroy much of the young corn. By plowing sod land for corn in late fall or early winter many of the cutworms will be destroyed; also when the land is plowed at this time the sod will have more time to settle and decay, and the corn next season will stand dry weather better. If the sod must be plowed again next spring no harm, but much good, will be done. Plowing any land twice for a crop or disking well after plowing is labor well spent.

Beautify the Home Grounds.

Properly planting the right kind of trees, shrubs and plants on the home grounds means much more than mere beauty—it has a decidedly practical side. It is cheaper to beautify the home grounds than to allow them to go bare and unsightly. Decorating the home grounds transforms a house into a home. It makes the house a part of a beautiful picture and surrounds it with such evidence of loving care that it immediately impresses the beholder with the feeling that people live in the house—that they do not merely exist there.—Journal of Agriculture.

BREVITIES.

Scandal is a very effective soiling crop.

Ten to one there is a surplus of lawyers, doctors and clerks in your county and a shortage of farm help.

The suggestion was made at a local English farmers' meeting that all moles should be killed at public expense. Next!

A Pennsylvania woman lugged her husband's wooden leg as the only way to prevent him from going to a saloon. The judge upheld her.

Well, sir, if people cannot get beef, pork or mutton at fair prices they will eat more eggs and chickens. Mrs. Hen is coming to the front.

HOUSE DECORATION.

How to Paper the Walls In an Attractive Manner.

So many mistakes are made in the papering of walls that perhaps a few hints will not be out of place, as spring will soon be here, when repairs are being made everywhere.

Never paper the walls of a small room with large figures. No matter how pretty they are, the whole effect is likely to be cut-whist and very homely. If the room faces north, use a warm tone, never a blue or a gray or a green. Yellow is admirable in a dark room, and bright rose makes even a plain, dreary room look rich and inviting.

The fashion in dining rooms at present dispenses entirely with pictures. The walls are either covered with tapestry paper or done in paneled effects. Wainscoting is very much the fashion for those that can afford it.

If the chair covers and portieres are of figured material they require a plain paper, and vice versa. A plain paper is much better than a figured one for showing off paintings and engravings.

If the room is very high it is a good plan to do away with the frieze and to bring the ceiling [illegible] down on the side walls at least eighteen inches, when the molding can be placed at the top of the wall paper proper.

The servants' rooms and the kitchen should be painted with a durable color, so that they can be scrubbed thoroughly with soap and water.

It is dangerous to trust the eye in matters of color; therefore the samples of upholstery materials should always be taken along when choosing the paper.

Dr. Eliot's Religion.

Dr. Eliot's "simple religion." Whosoever wrongs another in thought or in act thereby wrongs himself even more, for he robs himself of his own peace of mind. When he wrongs a fellow being he wrongs God; when he hates a fellow being he hates God. No form or amount of profession or prayer can then restore happiness to his mind until he has righted the wrong and in that way shown the only repentance that God will recognize. And, conversely, whoever serves a fellow being thereby serves God in the only way it is possible.

"Why do you break your engagement with that schoolteacher?" asked the friend.

The Battle

CHAPTER XX.

THE BATTLE WON.

JOE was gorgeously attired, according to his own ideas. He wore a brown suit with large and loud checks green and yellow and red—a blue striped shirt, a green knotted silk tie with a flashing scarfpin and a green tyrolean hat, which for the moment he held respectfully in his hand.

Jenny was neatly dressed in black. Huggleton was again struck by her possibilities, her beauty.

"Gee," exclaimed Joe involuntarily, "this is a swell shop!"

"Good evening, Jenny," said Huggleton kindly. "How are you, Joe?"

"I'm all right, Mr. Jackson—Mr. Huggleton, I mean. Say, Mr. Huggleton, Jenny has something to say to you. It is important. That's why we have come. Soon's she told me I had an intuition."

The millionaire turned to the girl.

"Well, Jenny?"

His voice was very gentle.

"You have been very kind to me, Mr. Huggleton," she began diffidently, "and—and—I would rather tell you alone."

"Come along, Joe," said Gentle.

"You know, Mr. Huggleton," began Jenny, "I told you after my husband was killed he left me with a little baby and no money. So I had to go out as a nurse. Then I sent my child—my beautiful baby girl—to a baby farm, and she died. They always do. I was all alone and so lonely in that beautiful house, and he—Mr. Lawrence"—

"Yes, Jenny. You told me."

"I can prove it all," she announced triumphantly. "I have his letters here."

Huggleton had often thought of this skeleton in the family closet of the unsuspecting Margaret when she had betrayed more plainly than usually her youthful contempt for the weaknesses and shortcomings of poor human nature. But of these letters he had known nothing. So there were incriminating documents in the house of Lawrence as well as in that of Huggleton! Well, well!

Jenny held out the letters.

"Do you want them?"

He saw her meaning plainly now.

"Why should I take these letters?" he asked.

"I know more than you think, Mr. Huggleton. I watched that girl, Miss Lawrence. She looks down on you, and—these letters would help."

"She would be unhappy."

"Why shouldn't she be unhappy? She makes others unhappy! I am unhappy."

"Jenny," he continued gravely, "you can't get happiness for yourself by taking it away from somebody else. You don't want to hurt Phil?"

"No, no; indeed not!"

"Then forget all this. Make a clean start."

"Yes, you have given me a chance."

Now her better nature won.

"Yes, I see," she said with frank contrition. "It's wrong. Joe suggested it. I will destroy the letters. No! You destroy them!"

She laid the package on the table before him.

"All right," he said. "I will burn them."

He led her to the door.

"Good night, Jenny, and good luck to you! You will find Joe at the end of the hall and can go out with him."

"If you don't mind, sir," she stammered, "tell Phil that I wish him luck. Good night!"

She was gone.

Huggleton returned to the table, took up the package of letters and looked at it passively. Here was his last trump! He knew it. Huggleton stirred impatiently. Why could not Margaret be a little reasonable? Why did wisdom come so late in life? These letters might prove to her that she had no right to judge and condemn Philip's father. But, then, it would make her unhappy, and should Philip ever know—

Huggleton weighed the package in his hands, pondering. Gradually a light came into his eyes. He had found the way!

Philip should not suffer. It was he, Huggleton, who would renounce.

He had learned to do his loving himself.

He approached the open fire in the huge fireplace, but ere he could thrust into its glow the compromising letters Margaret and Gentle entered. He hastily placed them on the mantelpiece and faced around interrogatively.

Margaret was in street costume.

"Good evening," said Huggleton. "Are you going out, Miss Lawrence?"

"Miss Lawrence is leaving us," said Gentle. His voice was grieved and disapproving.

"You are not going to marry Philip?"

"No. You and he are one flesh, as you said yourself. I have no right to come between you."

"But you love him still?"

"I love him more."

"This will be a great shock to Philip. It may set back his recovery."

The girl saw his intent. Her face grew cold and obstinate.

"He is quite well," she answered in her professional tone, "and—he is a man."

"Listen to me."

Margaret steeled herself.

"There is nothing you can say," she announced. "I cannot change."

Huggleton took up the package of letters.

"No," he said half aloud, as if to himself, "you cannot change."

She loved Philip, oh, yes, she reflected, but she loved her grievance more and most of all her conception of her own superior righteousness.

He stood there near the fire. He looked tired and old, but in his eyes shone a great light.

Margaret was determined to end this painful interview.

"I cannot live under this roof," she announced with an air of finality—"under the same roof with the man who ruined my father."

"It is bad business raking another person, eh?" asked Huggleton in a curious tone of voice.

He looked again at the bundle in his hands, then turned and threw it into the fire, watching the flames leap up around it.

Margaret watched him anxiously. What were those papers? Why did he destroy them now?

"Well," announced the millionaire, lifting his bowed head and squaring his drooping shoulders, "I will get my son. You renounce him; you do not even offer him his choice. But, as you say, he is a man."

He went to the door. With his hand on the knob he turned and added:

"Whatever happens, I want you to know that I have had more happiness

"Philip!"

in the last few weeks, since that shot was fired, than in all the rest of my life put together. I have had my son for six weeks!"

He went out, softly closing the door behind him.

The door opened again, and Philip entered, pale, weak, listless, his slow steps supported by his father.

"He knows now that your decision cannot be shaken," said Huggleton to Margaret. "It was best that his father should tell him."

"Margaret!" implored Philip from the chair into which he had sunk, exhausted.

"Philip!"

There was agony in her voice as she sank down on her knees beside him.

"Wait!"

Huggleton spoke again in that curiously level, enigmatic, commanding tone of his.

"I am not going to argue or plead," announced the millionaire. "I am going to yield. I have done wrong. I have got to suffer. That's the eternal law! Well, I will suffer."

"No!" cried Philip.

"My son, I have only a few more years before me. You have a lifetime before you—with her. You have the best thing in the world, as I had once, the love of a good woman."

He turned toward the picture of his wife and looked at it, then continued:

"Don't lose that love, my boy, as I did. Don't let anything part you from it, not even your father. You must go with her. It is I who must renounce. And—we can see each other once in awhile."

With a still, trembling little smile he asked of Margaret:

"It won't hurt him to see his father once in awhile, will it?"

Margaret rose to her feet precipitately. Her pride was broken, her enmity dissipated. A realization of the grandeur of this sacrifice so simply proffered, overwhelmed her and filled her heart with humility and contrition and love and the impulse of atonement.

"I can't do it!" she cried. "I am not going! I love you too!"

The three were in one another's arms. Gentle turned away deeply moved.

"My daughter! My son!"

Huggleton's voice trembled.

"I will devote the rest of my life to business—don't look astonished—the business of making you happy. And we will make the poor happy, too, if that will make you happier. See here; I am going to put $10,000,000 aside for you three—for my son, my daughter and our good friend Gentle. You shall be custodians."

A twinkle came into his eyes as he asked:

"Now, what scheme would you three students of poverty propose to utilize $10,000,000 in helping the poor of this city without demoralizing them? It's up to you."

"Ten million dollars?" speculated Gentle. "We could cover this island with model tenements."

"Cover the island?" cried Philip. "We could build about fifty! And they would never pay. We would waste our millions."

Huggleton was watching them, the twinkle still in his eyes. Something he had anticipated was amusing him.

"Well then, what would you suggest?" Gentle was asking of Philip, with just a little heat in the tone of his voice.

"I'd suggest homes for consumptives!" The answer came with unhesitating promptness. "That's what the city needs."

"I don't agree with you," Margaret now broke in firmly. "We do not want homes for consumptives. We must build homes to prevent consumption. We must think of the next generation. We must help the poor children; we must give them sunshine, green fields."

"Impossible!" Philip pointed out. "You can't take them away from their parents."

"Let the parents go too!"

"No, no; the parents have to work!" and "No, no; that would pauperize them!" cried Philip and Gentle at the same time.

"I never thought of that!" confessed the girl in bewilderment.

Huggleton was smiling broadly.

"Well, what is it to be?" he asked. "You three have been studying the problem for years. You now have all the money you want, and the first thing you do is to condemn each other's plans!"

And here he received the greatest tribute that had ever been paid him in his wonderful career. These three reformers, so sure of themselves, turned to him with implicit reliance upon his talent for organization, his genius for leadership and without a doubt of his ability to solve their problem for them asked, as if with one voice:

"What would you do?"

The millionaire went to the library table, unlocked one of its drawers, took from it a bundle of blue prints and typewritten papers and spread them out before them.

"It is the easiest way in the world," he began deliberately. "There's only one sound, practical, common sense way to help the poor of New York city with $10,000,000 without demoralizing them, and this is the way"—

* * * * * * *

They were seated at the table now, Margaret between Philip and his father, her head leaning against the shoulder of the one, her hand holding that of the other. Gentle, at Huggleton's right, was beaming with contentment.

They were examining plans, reading memoranda, commenting, discussing, asking questions and receiving prompt, clear replies.

Huggleton was happy.

He had taught many lessons, but learned one far greater than all those he had given.

He had learned to do his loving himself.

The battle was won.

THE END.

Human Tree Dwellers.

In the interior of Malaya live about 5,000 people, the remnant of an old tree dwelling race called the Sakai. They dwell in little thatched huts built in trees at the height of from eight to twenty feet. And no wonder, considering how they have been almost exterminated by the Malays. The Sakais are the aborigines of the peninsula. They are rather small and of fairly light complexion, with ugly faces, but well shaped and active bodies. They are not yet provided with modern weapons, but at a distance of sixty feet can shoot darts from their blowguns with almost unerring accuracy, thus getting plenty of small game. In their trees the people are almost invisible to hunters and explorers who thread their wilderness. Some few of the Sakais have left their forest homes to live in huts on the ground level on the outskirts of the Malay towns. But under British rule the remnant of the tribe seems fairly likely to survive and to keep its arboreal habits for years to come.

Length of Life Among Animals.

The maximum length of life of some of the best known animals is as follows: The horse lives to a maximum of 35 years and the donkey a like period; the dog does not exceed 25 years, the rabbit from 8 to 10, the goose 30, the duck, the hen and the turkey a dozen years. Among the animals having the best established reputation for longevity are: The crow, which lives 100 years; the parrot and the elephant, which attain an age of 150 years. Carp, on the other hand, appear to have usurped their reputation, which was based on ill understood facts from Chantilly and Fontainebleau. They rarely become centenarians. The tortoise appears to be the animal that lives the longest.—Vulgarization Scientifique.

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

This week the people of Charlevoix will have an opportunity of seeing and hearing two men who are asking for the position of United States senator.

One is a man aged in years, already occupying the position, who has served nearly all his life in congress, and whose warmest supporters are unable to point to a single measure he has originated during his long service, or any other reason why he should be returned, except that he has been there so long that he should be returned to faithfully serve in the future, as in the past, the great corporate interests of the nation.

The other candidate is a man in the prime of life, who has served eight years in congress and during that time has become one of the recognized leaders in progressive legislation. A man full of vigor and determination who has done things already in behalf of the people and would take his place in the senate with the champions of the people's cause.

The people of Michigan have an opportunity before them of electing a young man of ability and strength who will be a credit to the state and we believe they will elect Mr. Townsend.

Literary Notes

Making Friends with the New Dog

"Have a kennel ready before the dog arrives," says Kate V. Saint-Maur in the Woman's Home Companion for July. "A dry-goods case covered with roofing-paper will do if it has two heavy pieces of scantling nailed across the bottom, to lift it three or four inches above the ground, so that the air can circulate under it and prevent moisture from the ground making the floor damp.

"If the dog has been crated and expressed, remember that in all probability the poor beast will be frightened, tired and cross. Talk to it for a while and manage, if possible, to get a collar and chain attached before opening the crate. Then let Mr. Dog get out by himself, at his own time. Walk him about for some time and let him inspect the premises in the neighborhood of the house. Naturally cleanly dogs will need the exercises so don't curtail it. If there are any signs of constipation, a dish of sour milk will usually correct the trouble. If, however, the journey has the reverse effect, which is very likely to be the case in summer, scald milk, pour over some stale bread which has been toasted and feed when quite cool.

"Feed him yourself and take him for a run on chain in the evening, early in the morning and at noon. Decide which will be the most convenient hours and try not to change them. Two or three days are usually sufficient to make the average dog accept a new master and claim the kennel as his castle, so after that time he can be allowed freedom."

A Low Rating in Prospect

Little Mildred is in her first term at school where she gets reports as to her standing marked on a decimal scale. One hundred is perfect, and sixty is pretty serious. The other night while saying her evening prayers, her spirits, always high were actually irrepressible, and her petition was punctuated with snickers and smothered giggles.

"Do you think the Lord will like that kind of a prayer?" asked her mother reproachfully.

"Nope," returned Mildred glibly. "Not much! He'll gimme 'bout sixty on that!"—From Woman's Home Companion for July.

CAMP MEETING

Able ministers will be present to preach a full Gospel. All lovers of the truth are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

IMPROVING RURAL SCHOOL.

Much Care Should Be Given to the Class Rooms.

How about the schoolhouse in your town? What sort of class room is provided for your son or daughter to work in five or six hours per day? Do you know whether fresh air is admitted or prohibited in that room? Do you know whether the room is properly cleaned or is it germ laden with sweepings? And, if you don't know, why don't you know?

Why do you watch your child's scholastic progress as shown in weekly or monthly reports from the teacher and neglect to ask what care is given to his body from 9 to 12 and from 1:30 to 3:30 five days each week?

If you heard that little Jimmie Brown, who sits at the desk next to your son, was carrying diphtheria germs from the bedside of his sick father into that class room you would be the first to appear before the city physician or board of health to file a complaint. Well, Jimmie's father has a disease just as infectious—tuberculosis—and Jimmie Brown is carrying into that close, unventilated class room tuberculosis germs in his clothing.

Why don't you do something to prevent such dangerous contact for your boy?

Why don't you demand in your town notification and registration for the father and fumigation and segregation for the son? What right have you as an intelligent father or mother to let your child take such chances?

These are straight-from-the-shoulder questions which you as a parent should consider and answer. They contain the reason for physical examination of school children. This does not work a hardship on the few, and it does save the many.

MAKE YOUR OWN TRADE.

"Talk Quality, Emphasize Worth, Lay Stress on Inherent Goodness."

One of the big hardware houses of the country issues the following:

"Queer thing, this reputation. It takes toiling and moiling to get it, takes singleness of purpose and capacity to resist temptation to cheapen, but once you've got it its value is transcendent and can't be computed in dollars and cents. How infinitely better it is to build on a foundation of quality and worth than to chase the will-o'-the-wisp of cheapness, which leads you into bogs and swamps!

"'But my trade won't pay the price,' wails some timorous soul. Your trade, dear man, is what you make of it. If you insistently talk quarter tea and ten cent brooms and five cent brushes and ninety cent apples and fifteen cent oranges how in the name of common sense do you expect the trade to ask for anything else? Try the other.—Talk quality, emphasize worth, lay stress on inherent goodness and watch the result. Cut loose from cheapness, for you are leaning on a broken reed that will give you a bad fall one of these days. Profit and prestige lie in selling good goods. Is any feeling so all satisfying as the consciousness that your name stands for the best—for quality?"

BOOST YOUR BUSINESS.

Some Reasons For Failures of Small Retailers to Realize Profits.

There are several reasons why the profits of the small retailer are not larger. A study of his methods reveals, in the first place, lack of system. Operating expenses are not figured down to the nice point arrived at in large department stores. He does not always know just how much it does cost him to do business, and consequently his margin of profit is often too narrow. Sometimes the absence of competition begets reactionary methods. He falls into a rut. Stocks are allowed to accumulate until changes in fashion necessitate sharp price concessions on the old goods, reductions that are not always met by commensurate provisions in the price standard of the new goods. The possibilities of the show window are more generally neglected than otherwise, while store interiors seem dead and unalluring.

The small country merchant, however, is not always asleep to his opportunities. Occasionally—perhaps often would be better—one is found who has built up a very profitable trade from most modest beginnings. He need take no backwater from even the big city department store men.

BUSINESS HINTS.

A merchant is known by the clerk he keeps.

It is the entering to exceptions in any business that kills the pace.

Would you hire yourself for the job if you were the boss? Introspect.

He failed because his business grew faster than his capacity to direct it.

You can't be a good business man unless you have learned to be a good citizen.

All streets, given the alleys and country lanes, lead to the stores that advertise.

A clean, and orderly store is the cheapest advertisement ever a merchant had.

You can't plant pigweed and harvest corn. Nor can you in merchandising sow indolence and reap success.

Salesmanship is the fine art of making the other fellow feel as you do about the thing you have for sale.

Were we in the retail variety business we would mark every article in our stock in plain figures. We would do this because we would want to succeed.

Benham—You can't climb up to me, Mrs. Benham. Well, you're no skyscraper.—New York Press.

CAN HE DENY?

Did Mr. Kelley Make Pledges for Support? It's Charged.

Sault Ste. Marie, June 23.—An upper peninsula man, who is actively interested in Chase Osborn's campaign for the governorship, in an interview here today threw a veritable bomb into the Kelley camp by directly charging the lieutenant-governor with having made a pledge, months ago, to the mining interests of the upper peninsula that he would, if elected governor, veto the tonnage tax bill if it passed the legislature. He said:

"My attention has been called to an editorial in the Lansing State Republican, which has lately become the Kelley mouthpiece, in which the declaration is made that the gubernatorial contest lies between Osborn and Kelley. This is followed by the bald statement that Osborn is 'pledged to the mining interests, while Kelly is pledged only to the good of the state.'

"Up to a few days ago I was inclined to agree that the contest lay between Messrs. Osborn and Kelley, but since Kelley's Mt. Pleasant speech, in which he attempts to repudiate his intimate association and connection with the present administration, I am beginning to believe Kelley will be a negligible quantity in the situation before primary day. People instinctively admire loyalty even when the object of that sentiment is not entirely to their liking. But when, as in the present case, a man who is an integral and important part of an organization, who has been largely responsible for the success at the polls of that organization, attempts to repudiate it solely because he finds public sentiment almost universally unfriendly to that organization, I have too high an opinion of public intelligence to believe he can get away with it.

"The second declaration in the Republican is a most unfortunate one so far as Kelley is concerned, since it permits of a rejoinder which will puzzle Mr. Kelley to meet satisfactorily.

"Mr. Osborn is pledged to no special interests, either in the upper or lower peninsula. He is pledged to see equal and exact justice done all interests. His political record and the character of his declarations upon the stump; in fact his entire life and the quality of his mind give absolute assurance upon this point. But how about Mr. Kelley?

"Is Mr. Kelley prepared to deny without qualification that in his efforts prior to Mr. Osborn's entrance into the race, to secure the support of the upper peninsula that he gave certain representatives of the mining interests his personal pledge that he would protect the mining companies against the tonnage tax proposition should it become an issue before the next legislature? Is Mr. Kelley ready to deny that he gave these representatives the assurance that if a tonnage tax bill passed the legislature, and he were governor, he would kill it by his veto?

"I don't believe Mr. Kelley will answer these questions. He has had the good opportunity to do so, but declined. The Detroit Free Press, several weeks ago, asked a similar question. Kelley sneered it then, and I presume he will ignore it now."

"While equitable assessment for taxation is still a problem as it always has and will be for years to come, it is no more a problem now than it has been during the six years of the Warner-Kelley regime. Throughout the six years of Warner as governor, and Kelly as lieutenant governor, no word on this subject escaped either Kelley or his chief. Now that Kelley is a candidate and needs an issue he has become very keen for equitable assessments, particularly in a section of the state where he does not expect much support.

"The real issue in Michigan today and the issue in which every citizen is interested is that the money collected for state taxes shall be honestly, wisely and conservatively expended. Since the Kelley-Warner record along this line is not exactly popular, Kelley is making every effort to distract attention from this phase of the situation."

HOT SHOT.

Mr. Kelley in Isabella County Has a Record.

Editorial bird shot from the Isabella County Republican, where the "repudiation" took place.

The Republican party in Michigan has a chance to redeem itself by nominating Chase S. Osborn at the September primaries.

Warnerism and Patrick H. Kelley, are inseparable—paste this in your hat and keep it there until after the primary. You will be money ahead when taxes are assessed.

Have you noticed that every Warner appointee is laboring incessantly for Kelley—and since Pat says he has "cut loose from Warnerism?" Isn't it significant? and doesn't it appear just a little ludicrous?

In his characteristic manner, Patrick H. Kelley says he has cut loose from Warnerism. The same Pat, who has materially helped to make Warnerism so repugnant to the people of the state of Michigan, and whose candidacy is still fostered by the element from which he says he has disengaged himself. Oh, piffle!

Pat Kelley's petition was circulated in this city for two weeks, and sent back with one solitary name. Pat is personally all right, but any man that is suspected of having been exposed to Warnerism, must be thoroughly fumigated before the fellows will tie up to him in this community.—St. Louis Leader.

And with a long satisfied sigh he handed the flask back and remarked: "That did me lots of good. I needed it, for it always makes me sick to see a woman faint away."—Fenton Courier.

NATIONAL BOY CITY

Will Re-open Again Friday, July Twenty-two Large Delegations Will be Present From Eastern States.

Boy City, which held forth for the first time last summer on Pine Lake, will reopen Friday. Beginning next Sunday there will be four "Big Sundays" at which the young citizens will furnish most of the talent and at which the Boy City band will give concerts. The circus will be held on August 12, and some remarkable talent evidenced among the boys last year will be developed immediately by Dr. J. C. Elsom, who again will be physical director of Boy City. Dr. Elsom is director of athletics at the University at Wisconsin. Besides attending to the physical welfare of the boys this year he will head the camera club, in which line of work he is an acknowledged expert.

Although National Boy City will cease to exist as a thing of wards, council and municipal government as soon as the circus is over, there will be some who will remain until school opens in September. And it is the intention of Judge Brown and those interested with him in the promotion of the welfare of boys to establish next year an all-the-year-'round Boy City, with a school as the principal factor. Parents in the east already have indicated their intentions of sending their boys to the proposed institution, where the civic not the military, idea of training will be promulgated.

To the list of boys who came to Boy City last summer, New England and Pennsylvania delegations will be added this season. This is the direct result of scores of lectures given during the winter by Judge Willis Brown in those localities.

Advices from Indiana indicate that that state again will have the greatest number of citizens, excepting Michigan. Judge Brown has received many letters from budding politicians asking for "tips" on the political situation, and some prospective candidates for city offices already have started their canvass for votes at the primaries by means of the mails. An exciting election is looked for.

His Authority.

General Winfield Scott, the hero of the Mexican war, used a secretary for all his correspondence, private as well as official. Once, in the absence of his secretary, he undertook to write an order for the transferring of some provisions and spelled "wagon" "waggon." Later the secretary in looking through the various memoranda, etc., found the order and detected the error.

"General," he asked affably, "by what authority do you spell 'wagon' with a double 'g?'"

Scott never turned a hair as he replied without a moment's hesitation:

"By what authority? By the authority of the major general commanding the armies of the United States, sir! What better do you want?"

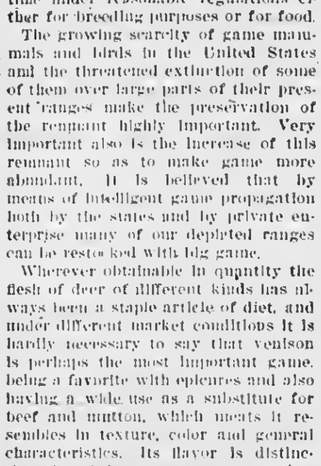
VENISON FOR PROFIT.

Government Officials Think Farmers Could Rear Deer Successfully.

In "Deer Farming in the United States," a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture, the economic possibilities of raising deer and elk in the United States are discussed. It is believed that when the restrictions now imposed by state laws are removed, says the bulletin, this business may be made an important and highly profitable industry, especially since it will be the means of utilizing much otherwise unproductive land. The raising of venison should be and is naturally as legitimate a business as the growing of beef or mutton, and state laws should be so modified as to permit the producer who has stocked a preserve with deer at private expense to dispose of his product at any time under reasonable regulations either for breeding purposes or for food.

The growing scarcity of game mammals and birds in the United States and the threatened extinction of some of them over large parts of their present ranges make the preservation of the remnant highly important. Very important also is the increase of this remnant so as to make game more abundant. It is believed that by means of intelligent game propagation both by the states and by private enterprise many of our depleted ranges can be restocked with big game.

Wherever obtainable in quantity the flesh of deer of different kinds has always been a staple article of diet, and under different market conditions it is hardly necessary to say that venison is perhaps the most important game, being a favorite with epicures and also having a wide use as a substitute for beef and mutton, which meats it resembles in texture, color and general characteristics. Its flavor is distinctive, though it suggests mutton rather than beef. In chemical composition it is very similar to beef, though, judging from available data, it is not so fat as stall fed cattle. The following figures show how it compares with beef and mutton: A lean venison roast before cooking has been found to contain on an average 75 per cent of water, 20 per cent of protein or nitrogenous material and 2 per cent of fat; a lean beef rump, some 65 to 70 per cent of water, 20 to 23 per cent of protein and 5 to



ROCKY MOUNTAIN ELK.

14 per cent of fat, and a lean leg of mutton, 67 per cent of water, 19 per cent of protein and 13 per cent of fat.

Venison, beef and other common meats are very thoroughly digested whatever the method of cooking. Venison may be roasted, broiled, pan broiled or used for making stews in much the same way as beef. It should be eaten as soon as possible.

The general popularity of venison is so great and the demand for it so widespread that overproduction is improbable. The other products of the deer—skins and horns—are of considerable importance, and in countries where deer are abundant and especially where large herds are kept in semidomestication the commerce in both is very extensive.

A number of species of the deer family have been proved to be susceptible to domestication. The reindeer, however, is the only one that has been brought fully under the control of man. The fact that the European red deer and the fallow deer have been bred in parks for centuries without domestication does not prove that they are less susceptible to the process than the reindeer. The purposes for which they have been held captive and the environment given them have been markedly different. It must be remembered also that few attempts have been made to rear and domesticate deer under intelligent management. The work has been largely a matter of chance experiment. If they had been as long under careful management as cattle they would now probably be equally plastic.

But raising deer for profit does not necessarily imply their complete domestication. They may be kept in large preserves with surroundings as nearly natural as possible and their domestication entirely ignored. Thus the breeder may reap nearly all the profit that could be expected from a domestic herd, while the animals escape most of the dangers incident to close captivity. But the breeder who aims at the ultimate domestication of the animals and whose herd approaches nearest to true domesticity will in the end be most successful.

ASPARAGUS CULTIVATION.

How to Make a Bed of the Edible Young Shoots.

Asparagus is a perennial herb cultivated for its edible young shoots. It is a rugged plant and will thrive under adverse conditions, but to obtain the succulent stalks needed for culinary purposes well drained, rich soil is absolutely necessary. The soil should be well mixed with rotted manures containing much nitrogen and potash.

Prepare the bed by plowing or spading deeply, beginning the work early and looking after the drainage problem carefully. Plants at least one year old should be obtained for this bed. They can be raised from seed, which is sown outdoors in April in drills one foot apart, the seed being covered about one-half inch. Plants suitable for transplanting the following spring may be easily grown this way, or roots may be obtained from one to three years old.

Set the plants in the permanent bed in furrows eighteen inches apart, the plants being the same distance apart in each furrow. Be careful to spread the roots out naturally and set each plant on a little mound of earth in the furrow. Cover at first to a depth of a few inches, gradually filling in as the season advances. In the fall cut back all the stocks to a level with the ground for the winter.

In the second year loosen the soil by shallow spading. When the first shoots appear the rows may be hilled up somewhat. Cut sparingly until the third year, as the plants will be more productive afterward.

How to Overcome Oily Hair.

A young woman who has tried all sorts of remedies to keep the oil out of her hair says she gets best results by using a shampoo made from pure olive oil soap in which a pinch of soda has been mixed. Cut a cake of soap into a quart of boiling water to make thick jelly when cold. This is bottled and kept for future use. Before shampooing take a couple of spoonfuls of this jelly, mix it with a pinch of soda and rub it well into the scalp, which has first been wet with hot water. Another way to apply the shampoo mixture to the scalp is to part the hair in strands and rub it on with a toothbrush or small nailbrush. After the scalp and long hair have been well washed they should be rubbed vigorously with the finger tips and thoroughly rinsed.

Snakes.

The holes commonly seen in the fields are not "snake holes," though commonly called such. They are made by field mice, shrews and moles, often by the larger insects, and it is very seldom that snakes even take refuge in them. Few snakes actually dig holes. They burrow in soft ground, the subterranean species, but these live, as a rule, in soft, yielding soil.—St. Nicholas.

Neighborhood Notes

According to report the Excelsior township board of review of Kalkaska county is slated for a carpetting to fell the state tax commissioner why the tax roll of Excelsior township was tampered with and the assessment lowered. Last year the tax commissioner made a trip to Excelsior township and after going over the tax rolls, boosted the assessment. This year the township board lowered it and the board members are slated for a "warming" at the hands of the commissioners, who will make another trip to Kalkaska county soon.

The state tax commission has completed his work at Traverse City and the assessed valuation was raised from $1,677,300.29 to $7,771,588 an increase of $3,097,227.80. Our friends over at Traverse will have some taxes to pay this fall.

* * *

Traverse City gets the state meeting of the Elks next year, this having been decided at Detroit Thursday. The state officers elected were C. E. Lowen, president, Saginaw; James Kehoe, first vice president, Traverse City. All the other officers were re-elected, including George W. Kent, sergent at arms, and Henry Smith, doorkeeper, both of Traverse City.

There is a vast difference between extending hospitality to a friend in a local option county, and turning private residence into a blind pig. The supreme court set forth the difference in opinion last week. In the village of South Boardman, Kalkaska county, Frank Bedell conducted a barber shop. In the rear of the shop were his living rooms. Bedell was arrested on a charge of selling liquor in a local option county. Evidence introduced at the trial in circuit court showed that it was not always Bedell's liquor which was consumed and that whiskey and beer was being brought to the place in quantities by the visitors. Bedell was convicted and the case was appealed on a bill of exceptions.

In reviewing the case, the court holds in part as follows: "The facts disclosed by the record before us do not show the exercises of a justifiable act of hospitality, but on the contrary, show the conducting of what is vulgarly known as a blind pig. If what was done by the respondent was not a violation of the law, then it permits what the legislature never intended—a method by which a substitute may be found, while exempt from payment of taxes without regulations and restrictions, which experience has shown to be necessary where liquor is sold."

Pleading guilty in circuit court to poisoning domestic animals, Fred and Frank Bennett, brothers, were sentenced to from one to five years in the state's prison at Jackson by Judge Mayne.

The men were arrested following the poisoning July 2 of three milch cows, three yearling heifers, one yearling bull and two horses belonging to Glen A. Brigham, of Barkley, the stock having eaten paris green which had been mixed with salt and spread on the grass in the pasture where they were feeding. This pasture was on Grant township just inside the Wexford county line.

After the arrest of Fred Bennett he attempted to throw suspicion upon an old man whom Brigham had set to work on the place, giving the old man work that Bennett had been doing. There was nothing to show that the other man had had anything to do with the poisoning, and Bennett then threw suspicion on his brother, Frank. When Frank Bennett was arrested by the officers he told how the deed had been done, both men pleading guilty in court to their offence. In a spirit of revenge, they declared, while fishing together they planned the poisoning, one purchased and assisting the other to mix the paris green in a shoe box, later pouring it where the stock would eat it.

NEEDFUL KNOWLEDGE

Charlevoix People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are so unspeakable that they leave no ground for doubt. Sick kidneys excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back aches constantly, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighed down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger of dropsy, Bright's disease, or diabetes. Any one of these symptoms is warning enough to begin treating the kidneys at once. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Charlevoix proof:

W. George Lunn, P. O. Box 41 Charlevoix, Mich., says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years and have found that they are very effective in relieving troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn of a case in which Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

RUSSELL SHERMAN.

He Was an Excellent Scholar, but Not Especially Manly.

By OLIVE EDNA MAY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Russell Sherman led his class at the normal school. He was a hardworking student, spending all his surplus time in odd jobs by which he could pay his way while obtaining an education. He roomed alone, having no intimate associates and taking no part in the athletic games of his fellow students. "I like Sherman," said Tom Blake, one of the students, "but he's almost too delicately organized for a boy and has all the sensitiveness of a girl. I caught him crying one day when some one said something to him to hurt his feelings. Think of a fellow fifteen years old crying!"

One day Blake while walking across the campus saw Sherman shrinking away from Jim Potter, a bigger boy who was following him up with clinched fists. Tom hurried on and heard Potter hiss between his teeth:

THIS TIME IT WAS A CAKE.

"Sissy!"

"What's the matter between you two?" asked Blake.

"None of your business," said Potter.

"What is it, Russell?"

"He sits next me in mathematics and wanted me to 'pony' him this morning at recitation. I couldn't. The teacher was looking straight at us."

"You lie!" said Potter.

Russell, instead of answering the insult with a blow, shrank back. His face was scarlet, and his eyes were wet.

"I wouldn't stand that if I were you, Russell," said Blake. "It's better to get thrashed than to take the lie."

"I don't want to fight any one," replied Russell in a trembling voice. "I only want to be let alone."

"Well, take that for a parting gift," said Potter, and he slapped Sherman's face.

Blake, who had been curbing his indignation, could no longer stand this bullying of the strong over the weak. Making a rush for Potter, he tried to strike him, but Potter was too quick for him and, avoiding the blow, planted its mate on his cheek. A number of boys just out from recitation saw the fracas and, running forward, surrounded the combatants.

"A ring, a ring!"

Blake and Potter stripped to the waist.

"What's it about?" asked one of the boys.

"He's fighting for Sissy Sherman," said Potter.

The eyes of all were turned toward Sherman, who was vainly endeavoring to repress tears. He started to go away; then, as if ashamed to leave a fight that was on his account, he turned back and stood on the outer edge of the circle.

The combatants were between sixteen and seventeen years old. Potter was heavier than Blake, who was rather tall and slender. Blake had the advantage of a good cause, while Potter soon learned that he was without the sympathy of the spectators. Russell Sherman, though not physically strong or manly, was respected as the head of his class, and the head of the class is class property to be treated and respected as such. Therefore Blake, who was defending Sherman, was considered to be fighting for the honor of the class. Besides this, many of the boys had been bullied by Potter, and they would be glad to see him downed.

Half a dozen rounds had been fought when Blake, just as Potter was aiming a well directed blow at him, slipped and fell. Potter fell with him and, getting his knee on him, began to hammer him with his fist, when Sherman rushed at him, seized him by the hair and pulled him over. Some of the larger boys interfered, and the combatants got up. Then, after a brief rest, they began another round.

Stories of schoolboy fights usually give a victory for one or the other of the fighters, but in most cases they continue till both are tired out. Such was the case in the battle between Blake and Potter. About the time the spectators were thinking of stopping the fight a teacher was seen in the distance coming toward the scene of the struggle, and in another minute not a boy was to be seen on the campus.

After this Russell Sherman kept to himself more than ever, if that could be. He had the respect of his fellow students in everything except pluck. He was not considered manly—that is, so far as fighting his way was concerned—but with the decline of the old military spirit that for centuries gave first place to the strongest and bravest respect for brute strength has dwindled. Sherman had brains, and the pre-eminency of brains over muscle is fully recognized in the twentieth century. But he possessed a certain kind of pluck that no other boy in the school displayed. He was the only boy there who was earning his own education.

The day after the fight Tom Blake saw Russell Sherman coming across the campus toward him, but Sherman when he reached a fork in the cement walk turned aside, going in another direction. Blake saw plainly that the boy he had fought for shrank from meeting him. At first he didn't like this action on the part of his protege. He thought that Sherman should have come up to him frankly and thanked him for standing by him so far as to fight for him. But Blake was a thinking sort of a boy, and it occurred to him that if the tables were turned, if some boy bigger and stronger than he had fought for him, how would he feel toward that other boy? He would not quite put himself in such a position, for he had good strength for his age and was not fearful. Nevertheless he could excuse Sherman on the ground that he had received protection from a bigger boy, had resented it and would naturally feel demeaned by accepting it.

Blake went on to his room and, glancing at his study table, saw something on it, flat and round, wrapped in white paper. Taking off the cover, he came to some oil paper, which contained something soft. Removing this wrapper, he uncovered a pie.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed. "I wonder how that came here."

He ate half the pie, then bethought himself who had left it there. Numerous inquiries failed to elicit the donor. He racked his brains to discover what friend he had that would thus favor him, but could not think of any one. One person occurred to him as the possible giver—that was Russell Sherman. But the pie had been tied up with a very narrow blue silk ribbon instead of a string, the ends being tied in a bow. Blake knew that no boy would ever tie up anything with a bow. No; some of his aunts, sisters or cousins must have sent it to him.

He thought that when he met Sherman again he would say something to make him feel easier about his position. He found an opportunity one day when coming out of recitation.

"Hello, Russell!" he said.

"Hello, Blake!" was the reply.

"Going to win the valedictory?"

"I don't know."

"I hope you will."

"Why?"

"Oh, I think you're a pretty good sort of a fellow!"

"I don't believe you respect me much."

"Yes, I do. Why do you think I don't?"

"Oh, I don't fight my own battles!"

"You would with boys of your size."

"I haven't had a chance before this to thank you for that fight you had with Potter. It was mighty good of you."

Blake felt Russell's hand feeling for his and saw a pair of grateful eyes turned upon him. Thinking the affair was getting mawkish, he made pretense of wishing to catch up with another boy and ran away. When he went to his room to prepare for supper he saw another gift on his table. This time it was a cake.

Again Blake questioned the maids and others in the house, but no one could, or, rather, would, tell him who had left the gift.

Meanwhile Russell Sherman was distinguishing himself in his classes, continually gaining honors.

Graduation day came, and the boys made their speeches. Last came Sherman with the valedictory. He had fulfilled the expectations of his teachers, his standing being higher than had ever been reached in the school before. As soon as he started to speak, persons in the audience began to whisper to each other: "How young he is! His voice hasn't even changed." The boy acquitted himself well and received more enthusiastic congratulations than are usual on such occasions. The world admires strength, but loves weakness.

The graduating class separated, some to go the next autumn to college, others into business. During the summer Tom Blake went to a farmhouse where boarders were taken. On ascending the steps he saw a girl in a white dress dart into the house. He thought nothing of this, however, till supper time, when he saw the same girl sitting at an opposite table and trying to hide her face from him. After supper he met her in the hall. He stopped her and asked:

"I beg pardon. Aren't you a sister of Russell Sherman?"

"I am Russell Sherman."

And then it all came out that Edith Russell Sherman, having been denied admission to the normal school, had donned boy's apparel and entered as a boy. As soon as she had been graduated she returned to the dress of her own sex.

Tom Blake and Edith Sherman are now studying at a good college. It looks as if they would stick in proximity for the rest of their lives.

THAT MATTER OF EQUAL TAXATION

HON. CHASE S. OSBORN'S MANLY STATEMENT ON THE SUBJECT OF MINE PROPERTY.

Efficient Administration Needed That the People's Will May Prevail.

Owosso, Mich.—Chase S. Osborn, of the Soo, was in Owosso Friday afternoon, and when talking on the question of adequate taxation for the upper peninsula mining properties, advocated the formation of a commission which would have power and ability to put the mines on an equitable basis with the rest of the state. Furthermore, he pledged himself, if elected governor, to do all in his power to bring such a commission into being.

"While I sincerely believe," said Mr. Osborn, "that many of those who are discussing the question of taxation, especially with reference to increasing the mine values and taxation on them are earnest in their opinions, that primarily the question has been raised by those who are interested in creating sectional feeling between different parts of the state for political effect. There is not an honest citizen who does not believe in the adequate taxation of all the property of the state, regardless of where it is situated or what it is.

"The proposition to make a revision of values is not a new one. This is provided for under the law. The revaluation of all property is made mandatory under the law, every five years, and a new valuation under this provision will be made next year, and would have been made whether the question had been made on issue of this campaign or not.

"I earnestly desire to state that the mines and other properties of the upper peninsula should pay their just share of taxation, as well as other property of the state. The mining regions of the upper peninsula are 200 miles from my residence and the section in which I live is under no more mining influence or domination than Wayne county or Shiawassee county. If this question of taxation, which is as old as society, is raised as an issue for the purpose of obscuring more important questions, then it is unworthy of being given a first place in the minds of the people at this critical time. A great question of this campaign, it seems to me, is as to whether the money as raised by taxation shall be honestly expended for efficient government or whether the state funds shall be wasted among political grafters or hangers-on, many of whom are only interested in holding their jobs, and who would not be given a position in private occupation in any of the legitimate activities of the state.

Public Integrity the Thing.

"It seems to me that the thing that is most demanded in Michigan today is that the state shall be put back into a condition of public integrity by an efficient administration. Until this is done and until men of honest character and capacity occupy the public places there can be no assurance that an intelligent and honest revaluation of the property of the state can be made, or that moneys raised by taxation will be properly expended, or that any of those things that the people most hope for will be accomplished.

"A great many departments of the state are at present hampered by a needless number of inefficient employes. Any good executive should be able to reduce the expenses of many of these departments at least one-half, and at the same time increase the department's efficiency. The state has been Republican so long that men who have no higher ambition than to obtain public place for what it pays them, have drifted into the party from all sides by wholesale. This has reduced the standing of the party and its character and efficiency. In other words, the party, which is as good today in its passive personnel as ever before, has become so careless as to permit the worst elements in it to dominate by reason of their greater activity.

An Expert Commission.

"Mr. Osborn, have you personal knowledge at this time whether or not the mines of the upper peninsula are adequately taxed?"

"I have not; and I don't think anyone else knows."

"How can this knowledge be arrived at?"

"It can be obtained through the work of a special expert commission, having knowledge of every phase of mining, appointed for the purpose."

"By revaluation?"

"No, by valuation, because there never has been a complete valuation made. This can be done as accurately by experts, as the valuation of any other property can be estimated. I think that a commission of three experts could do the work."

"Appointed by the governor?"

"Appointed by the governor or legislature, or elected. Its creation, of course, would be a legislative function."

"Would you, if elected governor, and there seemed a state-wide demand for this commission for the revaluation of mines pledge yourself to bring it into existence."

"As I have said, it is a legislative function, but I would be glad to lend my influence and do all in my power to help toward its creation."—Detroit News of June 11.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony grange held their regular session on Tuesday, July 12. The roll call was responded to by each member stating what was the grandest sight he ever saw. Our worthy master thought that the cavalry charge of 3000 Union troops at Winchester, Virginia, was the grandest he ever saw. Other members were partial to the beauties of nature and many showed their appreciation of the beauties of Charlevoix county and of our immediate vicinity, not thinking it necessary to go far for grand scenery. The principal topic for discussion was "The Torrens System of Land Transfers" on which W. C. Burdick read a very instructive paper. Our conclusion was that the grange was showing weakness in letting an association of abstractors prevent us from getting something which would be of great advantage to the people.

Sisters Bacon and Wilson and Brother John R. Newville furnished some very good music. Next meeting will be held July 26.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833.

Fruit Grower's Association

Mr. John I. Gibson of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, and Mr. O. K. White of the Michigan Agricultural College, are scheduled to attend a meeting of the Intermediate Valley Fruit Grower's Association, to be held at the Chas. F. Pinnell farm on Torch Lake, July 29. On the evening of the 29th Mr. Gibson will give an illustrated lecture entitled, "Developing Western Michigan" at the opera house at Bellaire. Mr. White will also be in attendance and will give an address upon fruit growing. Better than seventy Western Michigan farm and orchard scenes will be thrown upon the screen that the people of the Antrim section of Western Michigan may get some idea of parts of this wonderful region.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for testimonials.

PUFF PASTE RECIPE.

How to Make the Kind That Melts In the Mouth.

Puff paste should never be called by its christened name unless it is deserving of the title. It should be as light as air and melt in the mouth like a snowflake on the river. It has been supposed to be indigestible, but when it is light and dry and flaky it is perfectly safe to be eaten. It is only the soggy, heavy pastry that refuses to be separated by the gastric fluids and becomes like lead in the stomach in a very short time. Puff paste is not often a success the first time it is made. It requires practice to make it well and a certain light touch which only practice brings. If the young housekeeper makes her paste according to this recipe she will find it an excellent one:

One pint of good butter, one quart of flour sifted, three quarters of a teaspoonful of salt and a teacupful of ice water. Chill a mixing bowl with cold water. Wash the butter in cold water by working it with a spoon until it is soft. Divide it into four parts, roll in a napkin and put it on ice. Mix the flour and salt together and gradually mix in one part of the butter. Some people use their hands, while other people mix it with a spoon or knife. When the butter and flour are well mixed pour in the ice water very slowly. Do not stir the pastry, but cut it with the knife until the water is absorbed. Sprinkle the rolling board with a little flour, toss the ball of paste on with the knife and then put with the rolling pin until it is quite flat and about an inch thick. Roll very lightly and quickly the whole length of the paste at every stroke.

When the paste is rolled out lay one of the quarters of butter in a little flour and roll into a long thin piece and fold it into the pastry. Pound it lightly into a flat cake and roll again. Repeat with the rest of the butter, putting in a quarter each time and putting it and rolling it deftly and quickly. When the butter is all rolled in the pastry may be patted and rerolled as often as your strength will permit.

Each time the paste is folded over the butter a small bubble of air goes in, and this does not escape unless the pastry is jarred down. The motion for rolling should therefore be very light indeed and always away from you. The folding and rolling should continue until all streaks of butter are absorbed. Always put the puff paste on the ice to harden before it is baked. It should be very cold when it is put into the oven.

FRUIT CAKE BAKING.

How to Do It Without a Hard Crust or Scorching.

Many women can mix an excellent fruit cake, but few can place one in the oven without forebodings. To insure good results bake fruit cake in pasteboard corset boxes; 10 by 5 inches is a good size. Some buyers prefer to have these boxes in the store, and the storekeepers are glad to give them away. It is well to choose boxes not less than two inches deep, and three is better.

Line each box with manila paper well greased, pour in the batter, place a thoroughly greased manila paper over the box and put on the pasteboard lid. Place the boxes in a slow oven and bake until the cakes are done through, no longer. This will require at least two hours. When baked in this way the cakes will come from the oven retaining the fruit flavor, with no hard crust or scorched spots about them, and they will cut into tempting even slices of a rounded shape and size.

How to Make Paprika Chicken.

Although many of the foreign concoctions are extremely delicious, there is to one that is more tasty than that distinctively Hungarian dish, paprika chicken. In making it select a tender young chicken and after it has been cut into joints rub the flesh with salt and pepper it with paprika. When thus prepared put the chicken into a saucepan with a cup of tomatoes and come to a boil together without adding a drop of water even if the chicken is young. At this point arrange the chicken on a hot platter, add a cupful of cream to the tomato, season to taste with paprika and a little salt. If necessary add a little flour to the sauce over the chicken just before it is served. Although this is an extremely simple dish, it would be difficult to conceive a more delectable method of serving chicken.—Cooking For May

How to Crystallize Violets.

An easy way to crystallize violets is to arrange the violets already separated from leaves and stalks and washed, on a flat dish. Take a gum brush and brush them over with thin gum. Take two lumps of sugar and rub them together over the violets, seeing to it that all parts of the flowers get covered. They will look very pretty, especially by artificial light.

How to Prepare Stoves For Storage.

To treat stove and furnace for summer storage rub all parts of the sheet iron, iron and nickel with common petroleum ointment. Put on a thick coating of it and wrap small pieces and stovepipe in newspaper. In the fall wipe off the petroleum ointment with a soft cloth. When stove is warm polish with stove blacking.

How to Keep Kitchen Walls Clean.

The best way to keep the walls of the kitchen white and glossy is to wash their painted surface with bran water instead of soap. Boil one pint of bran in a gallon of water for an hour. The paint will look better and keep clean longer when washed with this than when cleaned with soap or water.

KEEPING YOUR OWN TOWN ALIVE

Make Suburban Life Attractive For Young Folks.

READING ROOMS VALUABLE.

They Can Be Easily Provided and Maintained by Small Tax Levy or by Popular Subscription—Civic Improvement and Debating Societies Should Be Organized.

It is the opinion of the author of this article that one of the first things needed for the upbuilding of any town is the necessity of combating the tendency of communities to lose sight of the cooperative spirit and become divided into factions. The second is the important use that may be made of libraries and reading rooms that may be established at various social centers of the towns.

There are communities and towns whose capacities for social enjoyment are limited, just as there are individuals whose capacities for self entertainment are limited. There are towns dead little towns where enthusiasm has been banished from the inhabitants' vocabularies, which seem to have been built only for people whose faces are turned toward the beginning of life, while they reluctantly step backward toward the grave.

Who is there that has not been in some community where a puritanical ban is placed upon the joy of living, where the innocent enjoyment of the young people has been changed to gray and somber forms and the beat of the community pulse has been lowered to a faltering sixty-two?

A careful watch upon those places would see them gradually empty themselves of their young men, who are seeking wider and more responsive fields than are afforded by the conservative attitude of their elders in their home towns. In this way the red blood goes out and the soul of the town is shriveled, its vitality sapped, its capacity for growth stunted. And here is the best indication of the spirit of a town—what the young people say about it.

If they are suppressed in their natural and normal efforts to give themselves wholesome pleasure they are sure to find little attraction. If they say the town is dead it is dead. They know. But if they get enjoyment out of living there the visitors are sure to find it out, and it attracts other people—people who desire to share a pleasant community life.

Beware of that town where the young people complain that there "is nothing to do." That town needs a municipal doctor to prescribe a social tonic. It needs a social magnet to draw the people together. It needs allopathic doses of the brotherhood of man.

We must remember, however, that when our young fellows go off to the cities and our daughters are taken by "discerning" young men away to other places we have conditions where the doctrine "Let well enough alone" will not apply. We have created a double problem. First, we must reenergize the languishing communities; second, we fill our cities and cause dilemmas. At present in the second problem we are not interested. It is with the languishing community, the near source of the nation's red blood, that we must deal. These communities must generate power and enlarge capacities for social enjoyment and intellectual activities.

Organizations should be organized in these dead towns, and they should get together and decide upon some plan of interesting the whole population. Public spirited citizens could take upon themselves the work of communication and make provision for entertaining the people. In the spare room of the building a school library might be installed, and the people made free access to it. A reading room would be easy to provide and maintain.

A small tax levy or a popular subscription could provide for equipment of gymnasium and payment for such services as would be necessary. Boys' clubs, girls' clubs, men's clubs and women's clubs could be organized to meet on certain nights or in afternoons. Dancing, school meetings, sewing circles, civic improvement clubs, debating societies, amateur bands and orchestras could be organized.

On certain evenings when the people meet for general entertainment there might be addresses by the mayor, some state, county officials, the health officer, some physician, or some other citizen interested in and an authority on some phase of municipal community progress. On these evenings the people from the rural districts could be invited and a simple entertainment in the way of refreshments served.

At these gatherings the right of free speech should be considered sacred. It must be everybody's meeting, and a chairman for each meeting should be elected every evening. The reason for coming together should be the common good, and such a reason will soon generate warmer community spirit and higher ideals of civic righteousness.

The split log drag is still meeting favor in many parts of the United States. Good roads associations are being formed all the time, and better roads are making their appearance over many sections of the United States. All this agitation will lead to permanent roads. The quicker the better. Get into the movement.

USEFUL HOME GARDENS.

Method of Laying One Out and Cultivating It.

Many people residing in rural communities are anxious to get information whereby they can make the space about their homes useful for garden purposes.

The one great secret in being successful with the family garden is to provide an abundance of plant food in a form readily available to the growing plants. Stable and barnyard manures are the best fertilizers at all times. Some of the commercial plant foods are excellent in their place, especially when it is desired to force some of the early varieties of vegetables, but their use requires that the soil be in a high state of fertility and that the gardener have an expert knowledge of their uses and functions.

Constant cultivation should be the rule, for this will keep the soil in an ideal physical condition for the roots to grow in, besides keeping the weeds in check. Cultivate early and persistently and keep ahead of the weeds. Allowing the weed seeds to germinate and then quickly destroying them by frequent cultivation early in the growing season will save a large amount of work during the summer.

Eliminate all the old fashioned beds and plant everything in long rows so that most of the cultivation can be done with a horse. There need not be an unpleasant amount of hard hand work if properly worked with a horse and cultivator. Provide plenty of room at the ends to turn around with the horse while cultivating.

Do not plan a larger garden than you can keep clean and well tilled. A small garden will supply an abundance of small vegetables for a large family. After the soil has been well enriched and well tilled we are ready to plant. If the plan has been well worked out all that is necessary is to plant each variety at the proper time in its right place.

The family garden must be planned to suit the needs of the family, and no two families will agree as to the amount and kinds of vegetables they will grow.

VALUE OF CLEANING UP.

What One Western City Accomplished by a Co-operative Movement.

During a "cleaning up day" held in a certain western city one-tenth of the entire population gladly volunteered at the set time, and more dirt was scraped together than 4,000 teams were able to cart away. Men, women and children were among the workers.

From sunrise, when the bugle sounded assembly, until nightfall the work never halted for a moment. Every cubic yard of dirt meant the riddance of a menace to health and comfort.

The city official also a thousand additional workers for the sidewalks. The spirit, the unity of action, was perhaps the greatest success of the day. Such civic spirit cannot but command success in the uplifting and constant progress of such a city or town.

Many towns and cities throughout the United States are doing everything possible to keep their streets neat and attractive. Its numerous communities clubs of men and women are working in school yards, cleaning and beautifying, putting up fences, seats, drinking fountains, raising flags, laying cement walks and setting out flowers.

Some cities are installing garbage and street carts of an improved type which has a sweeper attachment and saves time, labor and money. Let other towns and cities fall into this move and eliminate the phrase "spotless town" and substitute "spotless country."

To End Rat Nuisance.

Systematic organized destruction of rats, in which every person in the community enters, will always keep the rats down in a healthy and sometimes almost exterminate them.

Care in disposal of garbage.

Care in protection of foods.

Care in providing no entrance for the rats to the buildings.

Careful, systematic, thorough work in trapping and poisoning.

Careful training of a good rat terrier.

Careful removal of all straw and hay piles, loose boards and trash.

How Trade Is Lost.

It is a sad reflection on retailing that so many cheap and flashy mail order houses can succeed in getting trade away from local dealers. It indicates a real lack either of good service and good goods at attractive prices or of the knowledge where they can be obtained locally.—Printers' Ink.

WELCOME GUEST.

How a Girl Can Make Herself a Popular Visitor.

The girl who hankers after invitations must understand the art of being entertained.

"Why do I invite Ethel so much?" a woman once said of a young girl to whom she had shown many favors. "I invite her because she is a joy to have around. She never looks bored, is enthusiastic over every plan you make for her, is in for everything, yet does not expect to be on the go every minute."

Too many girls make the mistake of thinking the sole responsibility of a successful visit lies with the hostess. The folly of this is shown when the same hostess, with the same plans for a visit, will find one guest a delight and the other such a burden that the end of her stay is a welcome relief.

It is up to every girl who wants to be a popular visitor to see that she makes herself so. Learn to accept what is done for you graciously, to be pleased with trifles or to appear so whether you would secretly much prefer to be doing something else, to be happy and unruffled, which does not mean gushing, but a calm mind to be always in accord with everything. If you can't be these things don't visit.

How to Clean Feathers.

To clean an ostrich a plume is needed of white soap and tepid water. The ostrich is then taken in the left hand and dipped into the suds; the right hand is drawn down from stem to the time after time till the ostrich is quite clean. If black or white it is then rinsed in clear tepid water tinged with blue. It must be constantly shaken until dry. All colors require reviving. White ostrich feathers and fancy long plumes can be beautifully cleaned by soaking five minutes in warm suds containing a teaspoonful of baking soda. Draw them lightly through the hand, rinse in clear water and dry by shaking over the stove.

How to Dry Clean Lace Curtains.

To clean lace curtains by a dry process, even if they are colored with dust and smoke, take down the curtains and shake them free from dust. Spread a sheet on the floor and lay one curtain smoothly on it, cover thickly with cornmeal, lay on another curtain and again cover with the meal. Continue until all the curtains are covered with the meal, then roll up loosely and lay away for a few days. When wanted unroll, brush off the meal and hang the curtains on the line in the wind and sun for half a day, and when hung up again at the window they will look like new.

WILL OCCUPY NEUTRAL POSITION

Between the Opposlag Candidates for Governor.

DURING THE BALANCE OF CAMPAIGN

We do not Approve of Mr. Osborn's Methods.

All Candidates are Well-fitted for the Position. The Same is True of Candidates for County Offices.

Charlevoix has now been visited by both candidates for United States senator and all three candidates for governor, and the people have had an opportunity of sizing them up, and have probably made up their minds.

Early in the campaign the COURIER announced that Mr. Townsend would be our choice for senator and as time has past, we have become more and more convinced that Mr. Townsend should be chosen to represent us in the senate.

For governor we announced ourselves as favoring the nomination of Mr. Osborn over Mr. Kelley and Mr. Musselman. In doing so we did not overlook the high standing and ability of Mr. Osborn's opponents for we believe either would make a candidate around whom the Republicans of Michigan could rally, confident of victory. We believed, however, that Mr. Osborn's knowledge of the state, experience in the different public offices, which he has filled so well, wide travels and knowledge of men and governments of other countries, made him the peer of Mr. Kelley; while his business success proved him the equal of that splendid business man's candidate Amos S. Musselman.

If Mr. Osborn thus united the claims of both the other gentlemen, it seemed to us he was the best man for the position. We believe so yet, and it is with a feeling of regret that we read of the campaign he is making, one in which he leaves out of all consideration his own merits and his splendid equipment for the office of governor of Michigan, but devotes himself in seeking to create a predjudice against Mr. Kelley, whom he considers his strongest opponent, and belittleing the candidacy of Mr. Musselman. We will not advocate Mr. Osborn's nomination on those grounds, although we still believe that he is the best equipped man for the office, and shall probably vote for him next September.

When we think of the splendid services of Patrick H. Kelley, as lieutenant governor, and how his vote and influence was always used in the people's favor, we refuse to subscribe to the doctrine, whether made by our favorite or any other man, that his election would continue in office a gang taat had debauched and disgraced the state, nor will we contemponsly brush aside the candidacy of of that splendid Grand Rapids business man, Mr. Musselman. We believe Mr. Osborn is injuring his own cause, and, is injuring the cause of the Republican party by these tactics, which are alienating his friends and supporters all over the state, and we hope that during the balance of the campaign he will change his tactics, and talk about the affairs of the state as he has announced his platform, and not devote his time to seeking to create a predjudice in the minds of the people against his opponents.

Stand on your merits, Mr. Osborn, for you have them and we beleive you will be nominated.

Holding these opinions the COURIER will, during the balance of the campaign, occupy a neutral position on the question of the governship, as a newspaper, giving our readers the news of each, and treating them all fairly and impartially.

This same policy will be carried out in the contests for county offices. We beleive that every candidate, who has announced himself so far, is competent to fill the position to which he aspires; all shall be given an equal chance in the COURIER columns. The people are the judges, and whatever their verdict, we shall be found supporting the Republican ticket without anything to take back.

We don't believe that the primary should be made a medium for Republican candidates to make ammunition for the opposition and will not be a party to any personal attack on any candidate.

HELD MEETING LAST NIGHT

Local Option Organization is Perfected. General Discussion Followed.

Last night friends of local option met in Van Pelt Hall in response to a call issued last week, to form a local organization, and select members of the county loral option committee. The meeting was fairly well attended and the following officers were elected.

President, A. M. Wilkinson.
Vice-president, H. A. Putnam.
Secretary, W. A. Cline.
Treasurer, F. E. Wood.

The officers were empowered to select the six members of the county committee.

Considerable discussion was had among those present in regard to the results of local option and its enforcement, the general opinion being that results were very beneficial and that the law was being generally lived up to in this city

BURROWS HERE SATURDAY

Addressed an Open Air Meetlag in the Evening

Had Nothing to Say as to How He Stood on Progressive Measures.

Saturday Senator Julius Ceaser Burrows made a campaign tour of the county, reaching this city in the evening, where he spoke in the open air on Clinton street, where Postmaster Fitch had prepared a decorated wagon for a platform. Music was furnished by the Boy City band, after which the crowd was called to order by W. A. Smith, who introduced Hon. Dallas Bondeman of Kalamazoo who gave to Mr. Burrows all the praise for whatever legislation had ever been passed in our National congress, which was beneficial to Charlevoix, after which the senator was introdnced.

The senator began his talk with a good appeal to the people to turn out to the primary as in their hands was left the choosing of all officials who had anything to do with law making.

Mr. Burrows said he had nothing to regret in his over thirty years in congress and would have nothing to say in regard to the past, as it was all an open book, and then as long as he could hold the crowd together or until the arrival of the Boyne City band, which drew them away, made the same old speech that he has been making for a generation. No one can tell from what he said, what side he would be found voting on, on any of the live issues of to-day or whether he has any opinion of his own upon them. Taken altogether the meeting must have been a severe dissapoinlment to Mr. Burrows' supporters.

KELLEY HERE MONDAY

Made Whirlwind Campaign of Charlevoix County.

Was Accompanied by Hon. H. R. Pattengill and Hon. W. J. Pearson.

Monday lieutenant governor Kelley, Hon. H. R. Pattengill, and Hon. W. J. Pearson, made a whirlwind trip through the county in the interests of Mr. Kelley's campaign, visiting Clarion, Walloon Lake and Horton Bay in the forenoon, stopping in Charlevoix for dinner, and visiting Ironton and East Jordan on their way to Boyne City, where they addressed a big meeting in the evening.

In every place they met an enthusiastic reception. There is no denying the fact that Mr. Kelley is gaining strength everyday, and the outcome of the contest in a hard one to gamble on.

THE COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ONCE upon a time there was a man named Strang who called himself King and began a Mormon monarchy on Beaver Island, near the head of Lake Michigan. A young American named Plum began the dangerous experiment of interfering with the king's love affairs, and what Plum had planned should be but a diverting adventure, became a desperate matter of life and death—love instantaneous, lilac-scented, mysterious and ardent.

GREAT CELEBRATION

Will be Held in Grand Rapids Last Week in August.

The Celebration is in Honor of the City's Sixtieth Anniversary.

An official census report from Washington shows that Grand Rapids has graduated from the class of "cities under 100,000 population" to the class of "cities of more than 100,000 population." This announcement has put added vim into the preparation for the big celebration which Grand Rapids will hold the last week in August.

Work on the celebration has been going on since away last winter and great things have been accomplished. Many of the floats which will appear in the various pageants including the civic, the allegorical, the historical, and the Phantasmagorical pageants have already been completed and more are under way, the work being supervised by skilled artists. Entries are coming from far and near for the big fraternal parade. The water pageant on Grand river in connection with the gorgeous Venetian night festival on Thursday evening, promises to be wonderfully beautiful. Scores of automobiles and carriages, transformed by means of flowers into many beautiful forms, will appear in the floral parade.

Nearly a dozen balloon ascensions will be given every day in the aeronautical meet, while ten bands will give daily open-air concerts and appear in the parades. Circus attractions and novelty entertainment features will help to fill in odd moments.

It will be the biggest celebration Grand Rapids has ever held and that means a great deal.

MADE HOSTS OF FRIENDS

In Short Visit in Charlevoix Last Thursday Afternoon.

CHARLES E. TOWNSEND OF JACKSON

Candidate for United States Senator from Michigan.

Stands for Progressive Ideas in National Legislation. Record is one Which Shows him Man to be Trusted.

Thursday, Hon. Charles E. Townsend, the people's candidate for United States senator, visited Charlevoix and during his short stay among us increased his vast number of friends and supporters.

Mr. Townsend left Traverse City, where the night before he spoke to the Spanish War Vetrans, early in the morning, and, after making a stop at Bellaire, where he was joined by a few prominent Antrim county Republicans, came on to Charlevoix accompanied by Judge Mayne, arriving at 11:37. At the depot the party was met by a few Charlevoix citizens in autos and were shown the attractions of our beautiful city in a hurried manner. A slight shower having come up the party went to the Elston where Mr. Townsend held an impromptu reception on the porch, until the skies cleared when he called on our business men. After dinner Mr. Townsend started for Van Pelt hall, his progress down the street being constantly interrupted by the many who were anxious to grasp his hand and wish him success in his battle for progressive ideas in national legislation. Mingling with the crowds were many from East Jordan and Boyne City who came over to greet our distingmished guest.

Notwithstanding the busy time of day every seat was occupied and Mr. Townsend, who was introduced by Judge Mayne, delivered a short address, every word, of which, was listened to with rapt attention.

After paying a tribute to the beauties of the city and our fortunate location, which was sure to make us a city of destiny, he, as a candidate, told why he asked the votes of his fellow Republicans, telling what he had done, what were the principles he believed in and what he hoped to do. Mr. Townsend briefly sketched the early history of the Republic, how much power had been left in the hands of the few as was thought best at the time, until there had gradually came into power a class of men, who had controlled legislation and how progressive legislation had been throttled. How the insurgents had been able to secure some amendments to the rules and had restored some power to the representatives of the people. Mr. Townsend told of the activity of some federal office holders, who at heart were in favor of those who were fighting in the interests of the people, but were too cowardly to let it be known. He said this was a great state with many and varied interests and he believed Michigan's representatives could represent it without asking the consent of Rhode Island or Illinois. Mr. Townsend's whole address was a frank, straight forward talk on the issues of to-day and not of yesterday and left no doubt in the mind of his hearers of the sincerity of his purposes and his desire to represent the people of Michigan, as he has those of his congressional district, in the interests of the whole people and not of any particular class.

Half Million For Texas Good Roads.

Seventy-two miles of country roads, distributed throughout the entire county, are to be paved by Harris county, Tex., with shell and gravel within the next twelve months out of a recent road and bridge bond issue of $500,000, according to a schedule adopted by the county commissioner's court. In the list of the roads to be paved are a number of the most important highways in the county, one of which is the Webster Air Line road, running from Harrisburg to the county line, a distance of eighteen miles, where it will connect with a paved road to be constructed by Galveston county, thereby giving a complete paved roadway from Houston to Galveston via the causeway.

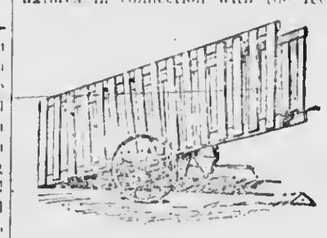
Farm and Garden

FOR LOADING ANIMALS.

A Handy, Easily Made Contrivance Is Sometimes of Great Use.

Perhaps every farmer has occasion to load some animal into a wagon, and many farmers prepare for this by building a stock chute. Frequently these chutes are built as permanent fixtures in connection with the feed



STOCK CHUTE.
[From the Kansas Farmer.]

lots, but they are often made so that they can be transported from one part of the farm to another. When a chute of this kind is built heavy and strong enough to support the weight of a mature hog or a large calf it becomes a clumsy thing to move. R. J. Linscott of Holton, Kan., has solved this problem of inconvenience in a very happy way, according to the Kansas Farmer. The wheels and axle used are parts of old machinery found on the farm, the wheels being taken from an old mower. The upper end of the chute is provided with two strong iron hooks, which are sharpened so as to engage the bottom of the wagon bed and prevent slipping after the animal starts upward. With such an arrangement there is no difficulty in building a chute of ample strength, because the question of weight has relatively little importance. The chute can be hooked on behind the wagon and hauled to any part of the farm, and it is a comparatively easy matter to put it in position by hand.

Bee Notes.

One must be deliberate and not perspire when hiving bees. The bees do not like the smell of excited persons.

Always have an empty box hive about the apiary properly set on a floor board. This will often catch a swarm that might otherwise be lost.

It is never good business policy to sell a customer bad honey or honey with an undesirable flavor. This will injure future sales.

It is well to keep all vegetation down around the hives, so that it will not interfere with the flight of the working bees between their hive and the feeding ground.

The number of colonies which any locality will support depends on the flora of the vicinity. There are but few places, however, that will not support from ten to twenty-five colonies to the square mile, and many localities will support a greater number than this. Bees fly long distances for forage, averaging at least two miles.

Smoke is the best agent known among beekeepers that can be used to make bees submit to their wishes. All sorts of material may be burned in a smoker, such as cotton rags, rotten wood, etc. There is a great difference in the disposition of bees, however, some requiring more smoking than others.—Farm and Ranch.

Growing Potatoes.

In Ireland, in the best potato growing localities, a yield of 400 bushels to the acre is nothing unusual. It is obtained by the use of about thirty loads of barnyard manure to the acre, supplemented by 500 pounds of commercial fertilizers, proportioned as follows: One hundred pounds of muriate of potash and 100 pounds of superphosphate. In England the best results are obtained by the use of twenty to twenty-five loads of barnyard manure to the acre, supplemented with 100 pounds of sulphate of ammonia, 350 pounds of superphosphate and 50 pounds of sulphate of potash. The popular fertilizer for growing potatoes in Maine, when planted where a two-year-old crop of clover or grass has been grown, is made up on the farm of 135 pounds of nitrate of soda, 600 pounds of tankage, 200 pounds of acid phosphate and 400 pounds of sulphate of potash, making in all 1,335 pounds. One-half this amount is used in the planter or mixed in the furrow and the other half at the first harrowing, when the plants begin to appear.

SUGAR BEET SEED.

Upon It Rests Ability of Roots to Produce Maximum Quantity of Sugar.

Testing the roots is one of the most important steps in the production of beet seed, since the value of the seed depends not only upon its quality from the standpoint of germination, but also upon the ability of the roots produced to store a maximum quantity of sugar with a minimum quantity of salts. With our present knowledge of seed production the standard of high grade seed can be maintained only by the most careful and rigid testing and elimination of all roots that are not of a satisfactory quality. Having selected roots of suitable size and shape, a typical core is removed by means of a drill which is passed through the beet at an angle, as shown in the illustration. This core is tested for sugar by the usual polariscope methods. The ability of a seed grower to maintain high quality in the root is one of the most important conditions in the establishment and maintenance of the best seed industry, says the year book of the department of agriculture.

There is a great deal of confusion in the minds of plant breeders regarding the real purpose of the selection of the roots from the standpoint of sugar content. Careful observation would seem to indicate that breeding and selection for high sugar content have to do mainly with the elimination of those individual roots that will not respond readily to favorable conditions of soil and climate with respect to the formation and storage of sugar and the preservation and perpetuation of those roots that will respond to those conditions. High sugar content, therefore, does not seem to be a fixed character in the same sense as are color, form, etc., but will vary to a marked degree when the conditions of growth are changed. For example, seeds from the same plant when planted in different parts of the country have been known to produce roots having a difference of more than 7 per cent in the sugar content, while the shape, color and general habits of growth remained the same. The importance of selecting the seed for sugar content cannot be overestimated, and, because of the importance of this work and the difficulties attending it, sugar beet seed growing can be carried on successfully only with special equipment, by the exercise of the greatest care and consequently at considerable expense.

SEED BEET SHOWING METHOD OF TESTING FOR SUGAR.

Charcoal as a Fertilizer.

Charcoal has but little plant food, yet it usually shows results. It gives light soils a darker color, thus making them warmer. It also makes soils porous and increases their power to hold water. Charcoal is a fine absorbent for gases. When worked into the soil it will no doubt prevent the escape of some of the ammonia formed when organic substances decay. For these and other reasons charcoal will help, especially on light soils.—Rural New Yorker.

Planting Watermelons.

Watermelons should not be planted until all danger of frost is over and should be planted in hills about ten feet apart each way. The more modern method of watermelon culture is to plow out the rows one way, fill the trenches with manure, thoroughly mix the manure with the soil in the trenches by running back and forth with a scooter-plow, then throw the soil back again and plant the seed on the bed thus formed.—Orange Judd Farmer.

FARM NOTES.

Few farmers know the names of one-fifth the weeds and grasses that grow on their farms. More knowledge in this direction would help.

When you give the boy a calf to raise don't pocket the money as soon as it is sold. That might teach the little fellow to be dishonest.

A prominent dairy journal declares that the dual purpose cow is a failure in the dairy herd. The dairy type cow is decidedly the most profitable.

It is better for both mare and colt for the latter to come in the spring. It is the natural growing season and causes less friction and hardship.

A hog that weighed 1,308 pounds alive and 1,336 pounds when dressed was recently slaughtered in England. It was a Jersey red boar, two and one-half years old.

Market products must be viewed from the buyer's side and not your own. You think to sell a two pound male chick is waste, but the customer will pay more then than after he is fed two or three additional months.

Insects and Alfalfa.

It has been discovered that the honeybee is of even more importance to the alfalfa than the alfalfa is to the bee. The wonderful strength and speed of the bees take them long distances for their food, and they have recourse to a great variety of plants. But the peculiar construction of the alfalfa blossom renders it unable to fertilize itself, and its shape makes cross fertilization very difficult.

At the Kansas experiment station a small plot of vigorous alfalfa was covered just before coming up into bloom with mosquito netting supported on sticks. It was therefore known that no bees or other insects could come into contact with the blossoms. Later a careful examination disclosed that the pods which had formed were entirely without seeds.—Coburn's "The Book of Alfalfa."

When a mistake is made in a ship's speed it may be set down as a knot, a error.

Just what John Q. Ross of Muskegon, one of the newer of the candidates for lieutenant gubernatorial honors, is doing is not known in some sections of the state. It is extremely doubtful if many voters know he is a candidate. He says he represents no clique or faction.

Candidate Osborn has been touring the upper section of the lower peninsula and now candidate Kelley is covering much the same territory. Some of this section, especially along the G. R. & I. railroad and the Pere Marquette railroad, is looked upon as some of Mr. Musselman's best stamping ground.

Elsewhere in this issue we print the announcement of W. W. Boyle of St. James, as a candidate for the Republican nomination for register of deeds. Mr. Boyle has long been a resident of the Islands and has a wide acquaintance throughout the county, which will make his candidacy one to be reckoned with.

When Chase S. Osborn filed his petition with the secretary of state it had 13,000 names attached and it is claimed that 8,000 of these names were from Wayne county, also that most of the others were secured in various counties in the lower peninsula and that it was not necessary to call upon the upper peninsula.

Clarence Bartlett was badly cut in the wrist Monday by falling through a window at O'Neills fish house. The fall was caused by the losing of his grip on a cake of ice. Both large and small audiences are greeting Kelley and Osborn on their trip, broken down automobiles have postponed a few meetings, late connections have delayed others, and yet the instructions are: "Mr. So and So will be in your county one day, make the day just as strenuous as you can for him and get him into as many towns as possible."

Meetings were held at Escanaba, Marquette, Hancock, Houghton, Calumet and Iron Mountain. George Clapperton of Grand Rapids accompanied Mr. Musselman. Everything indicates that a very successful season of fun and civic training will be held by the boys this year.

Henry D. Olney, one of the oldest and most highly respected pioneers of this region died at the home of his son, Herbert L. Olney, Monday. The deceased was in his 87 year and had been very feeble for some months from the infirmities of old age. The immediate cause of his death was dropsy and heart failure, thy end coming to him peacefully as he sat in his chair. Henry H. Olney came here from Iowa about forty years ago and was one of the band of sturdy pioneers to whom we owe the rapid advancement of this region. The high esteem in which he was held by his friends and neighbors was evidenced by the large number in attendance at the funeral which was held from the South Arm Grange Hall Tuesday, the service being conducted by Rev. John Hackett. Interment in the Jones cemetery.—Enterprise.

SHOULD BE MADE SAFE

Auto Drivers Obey the Law and Should be Protected

The last two weeks we have printed the automobile law of Michigan as many of our readers were interested. A careful reading of the law demonstrates that the people are amply protected. Dr. Thielen, one of our auto drivers, tells us he is glad we printed the law, but wishes us to call attention to the dangers which drivers of autos sometimes run through, the carelessness or deliberate actions of some of our citizens.

Among the acts of which he complains and which should be against the law, is the allowing cows to have their chain or rope stretched across the road also the danger which is run by dogs chasing out.

As we said in the beginning, the public is amply protected by the auto law and the rights of auto drivers should also be looked after as modern business makes the auto a necessity and the highways should at all times be in a condition so they can safely travel and not be obstructed by cows, dogs or anything else.

Are You a Good Guesser?

Next week we will have our window full of collars—an unusual window display—Corliss-Coon collars, and you know that means handmade collars with lasting style.

Guess how many collars there are in the window, one guess for every collar purchased next week, and the prize is a dozen collars for every four months in the year—three dozen collars in all. Prizes also for the 2nd and 3rd nearest guesser.

To every tenth collar purchaser next week we will present as many collars as each purchaser buys. If you are the 10th, 20th or 30th purchaser etc., you will get four collars if you buy two and so forth.

This is because we want you to know what good collars Corliss-Coon collars are, 2 for 25 cents.

Neighborhood Notes

The Freeman manufacturing company's woodenware plant at Kalkaska was completely destroyed by fire last week. The loss is $50,000 with very little insurance, the insurance being on the finished stock only.

The origin of the fire is not known but it caught in the vicinity of the varnishing room and had such a start when discovered that no fire department would have been able to have saved the wooden structure, the flames spread with frightful rapidity fanned by a high, southwest wind.

The entire mill and one warehouse, together with the finished and unfinished stock are a total loss. Eighty men are thrown out of employment by the fire, the factory having been the industrial mainstay of the village.

The plant was established there about a quarter of a century ago by W. C. Freeman. It is not known whether or not it will be rebuilt and there is considerable gloom in Kalkaska as a result.

Charles Stivers, a boy who caught on the Flyer to ride to the fire and who was thrown, is in a serious condition as a result. It was at first reported that his neck was broken.

Spanish American War Veterans closed a three day's convention Thursday night with a banquet. Three Rivers was selected for the next meeting and the following officers were elected:

Commander, Fred R. Schmalzreidt, Detroit; senior vice-commander, George Tolsma, Kalamazoo; junior vice, Charles Kerns, Saginaw; inspector, A. H. Grasser, Bay City; judge advocate, Robert Walter, Traverse City; surgeon, Dr. Wilhelm, Traverse City; chaplain, Rev. E. W. White, Jackson; council of administration, J. S. Hooper, Detroit; H. D. Gage, Traverse City; R. J. Bates, Sault Ste. Marie; E. W. Mennier, Big Rapids; William Waak, Saginaw; W. D. Park, Bay City; Walter Williams, Three Rivers.

Resolutions indorse the Lond bill which provides for raising the Maine. The resolutions also urge that a Spanish war veteran be placed on each county relief committee and on the board of control of the state soldier's home. They recommended the exemption from taxation of a Spanish war veteran's homestead and an appropriation to cover claims of Spanish war veterans now pending. The dismissal of any veteran from the public service except for just cause is condemned.

The adjutant's report showed 256 new members during the year, the order now having 1,038 members in the state, there being twenty-seven camps, of which Detroit has five. Nine members died during the year.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

Their Unceasing Work Keeps up Strong and Healthy.

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. When healthy they remove about 500 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some part of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms—pain in in the back, headache, nervousness, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the filters right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. John Chamberlin, Forest St., Manceloua, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills an excellent preparation for kidney disorders, in fact, I found them far superior to any other kidney remedy I ever used. My back ached severely and I had pains in my loins, coupled with other symptoms of disordered kidneys. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice, I obtained a box and their use brought me prompt relief from the aches and pains. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills at every opportunity."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

SUN BROTHERS' GREAT SHOWS

Coming to Town for Two Complete Performances. A Good Show.

With the advent of Spring and Summer each year, comes the Merry Tented Show, with its kaleidoscope review of amazing wonders, the trick elephants, jolly clowns, cute, cunning ponies, red lemonade and toy balloon venders and the thousand and one delights of the great American tented show. With everything new but the name and title, the Sun Brothers' Great Progressive Shows are underlined to exhibit at Charlevoix on Monday, August 8.

The show will arrive here by special railway train service in its own magnificently equipped 60 foot length railway cars, which are conceded by railroad men to be among the finest ever used by a show company. The public is cordially invited to be at the depot and await the arrival of this beautiful rolling stock equipage.

The show uses all water and sun proof tents, these pavilions are all new and of the latest ornate build. A particularly pleasing innovation with this show is the introduction of the new illuminating system. The big tents and the surrounding exhibition grounds are brilliantly lighted with Electric Calcium generators, which afford the finest light ever used for a similar purpose; it can be truthfully said, that night is turned into day.

Throughout the show is one of the finest equipped in America. Two complete performances are given daily. Matinee and night, at two and eight o'clock.

The "Big Show" programme as arranged for 1910, is peerless in conception and merit. There are over fifty male and female artists in acts of the highest calibre, all gorgeously costumed and skilfully executed. Comprising aerialistic "thrillers," acrobatic and gymnic displays, bicycle exploits, pantomimic oddities, marvelous educated animals, polite vaudeville specialties, and spectacular novelty ideas. Then there are "Nero" and "Hero," the man eating lions, the troupe of Military and Comedy elephants, the dancing camels, Prince Tiny, the smallest horse on earth, the baby camel "Macon" and its mother and Princess Hula, the only genuine Hindoo serpent hypnotist with a caravan of huge performing serpents.

At 12:30 there will be offered entirely free to the public, a series of gala out door shows. These free displays are of a sensational and diversified character and must be seen to be appreciated.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

When women take an interest in improving the moral condition of their town, seeing that the people, especially the children, are supplied with good clean amusements and entertainments and countenancing none but the best, their influence will be felt in the civic improvement of their town.

The W. C. T. U., of Worcester, Mass., has persuaded the company in charge of street car advertising in that city to remove all liquor advertising from the cars.

There was a gain of 1023 members to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Michigan last year.

Signatures to the Missouri prohibition petition keep coming in. Judge Wallace head of the Constitutional Amendment Association, formally filed the petition at the capital June 28. There are already more than twice the required number of signatures, but more are being obtained for the moral effect of numbers.

The men's class in one of the Sunday schools of Mount Vernon, Ohio, has grown from about forty members when the town had saloons to 520 members since the saloons went out. Many of these members used to be drinking men and some of them are ex-saloonkeepers and ex-bartenders. Along with this gratifying change in moral conditions has come a general increase in business and a corresponding decrease in drunkenness and crime.—The American Issue.

Literary Notes

Woman's Home Companion for August.

The August issue of the Woman's Home Companion is called "The Good Time Number," and it lives up to that title in every particular, giving ideas for summer enjoyment of every sort. The fiction is of the light, happy variety with in most instances, the atmosphere of vacation days charmingly depicted. "Mlle. Mystic," a midsummer comedy by Anna Steese Richardson, will doubtless be acted in many gardens during the summer, and a remarkably timely article on the Outdoor Play, by Walter Prichard Eaton, will help in a large measure to make al fresco theatricals the popular thing during the summer.

The prize-winning answers to the "Which Girl Would You Love" contest appear in this month's issue, and among the attractive and practical articles are "How to Build a House-Boat," by Charles E. Searle; and article about Queen Mary, by Philip Hamne Forster; and a boy's vacation letters to his mother.

The regular departments are summery and happy, the fashions are particularly fetching and the cookery is cool to even read about.

A Good Roads "Smoker."

Recently the Business Men's association of Larned, Kan., gave a good roads "smoker" which was attended by more than 300 citizens of the county. The enthusiasm developed insures a new era in the building and maintenance of good roads in this section of the short grass country. Such a meeting would have been impossible a few years ago because it was thought that the dirt roads of middle and western Kansas would never need any great amount of care. Increased population, however, has shown differently, and there are now no more enthusiastic sections of the state on the good roads proposition.

Need of Dry Roadbeds.

The most important object in draining a road is to lower the level of the ground water. If this is within a few feet of the surface it will be absorbed by the material of the road by capillary attraction. The result of this would be a softening in the road immediately below the surface. When heavy traffic passes over the road in this condition it so cuts it up that the water will not flow off.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co, Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for testimonials.

A GLASS EYE.

It Turned the Scale in a Matter of Love.

By THOMAS R. DEANE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I courted Jeannette abroad. There is no better field for lovemaking than traveling about, with nothing to do but enjoy oneself, or, rather, ourselves, for as "it takes two to make a bargain," so it takes two to make love. Jeannette and I met at Sorrento, where we sat in a pavilion in the midst of an orange grove looking on the bay of Naples spread out several hundred feet below us. Spoony young men are always talking to spoony young women about fickleness, and I found a convenient illustration in the ever changing hues of the Mediterranean. Besides, there is something in the Italian climate to quicken love. It is soft and balmy, yet the skies are bright and blue.

Then in Rome we dawdled through the Forum and sat on the stone seats in the Coliseum just as youths and maidens did some eighteen centuries before, except that the Roman couples of those days were there to see gladiators kill one another or wild beasts feed on lean Christians. But we were under the blue sky of Italy, and, as I have said, the Italian climate quickens love.

From Rome we drifted into Florence and stood at evening looking over the stone coping of the Ponte Vecchio at the placid Arno flowing beneath us while the last rays of the setting sun gilded the neighboring hills. And—as I think I have remarked before—the Italian climate is conducive to love.

But I didn't say that about the English climate. The English climate is conducive to—let me see—the English climate is conducive to colds, sore throat, rheumatism, the blues. I wonder that the English people ever marry for love, and I fancy there is less marrying there on that account than in any land on the face of the earth.

It may seem that this is not only disagreeable, but a digression. It may be the former, but it is not the latter. At any rate, it is a part of my story, for MY GAZE WAS FASTENED ON HIS GLASS EYE.

Jeannette and I parted in Florence having plighted our troth on the elevated Piazza Michelangelo overlooking the city. We were sitting beneath one of half a dozen statues of David, each being the original statue, and came together again in England.

What a change, not only in the climate, but in us—I mean in Jeanette! In Italy she had been responsive to my slightest whisper. Indeed, the slighter the whisper the better it accorded with our mellifluent surroundings. In England I, being hoarse, was obliged to speak to her with the voice of a megaphone, and she, being deafened by a cold, could scarcely hear me. Instead of leaning her head against my arm and looking up at me with a happy smile, as she had done in the Italian moonlight, speaking of poets and painters, she sat regarding me with watery eyes, saying that she wished it would stop raining.

This story goes to prove that what writers on the development of civilization say about the effect of climate on peoples is true. In Italy Jeannette and I had loved; in England the marriage question became one of practical advantage. I found that I was not as much in love as I had thought I was until Jeannette indicated that she was meditating giving me the grand bounce. This brought me to my senses.

Young Lord Crickenback, who never appeared without a very large flower in his buttonhole, a very small silk hat on his head and a monocle on his right eye, was the man who taught me that, despite my present watery surroundings, I did not wish to surrender Jeannette. Why had I not continued to keep her in Italy, or why did I not insist on the knot being tied before coming to this land, where there is no sentiment, only interest? This Lord Crickenback had nothing whatever to recommend him except that he had a title. Even with his title on the sunny shores of the Mediterranean I could have snapped my fingers at him.

Jeannette did not break with me. I think she would have done so had not the sun occasionally broken through the clouds to remind her of those happy days she had passed with me at Sorrento, at Florence and at Rome. On such days I noticed a sudden demonstration of a dormant love for me that had not entirely died within her. I wished on such sunny days that there were some places where one could go similar to the Piazza Michelangelo at Florence or the Corso in Rome. But there are no such places in London. The most enjoyable is Hyde park, but the sun doesn't shine long enough to dry the benches. And a wet bench is no place for spooning. One bright day I took her to the Tower, and we sat together in the courtyard of the old pile. I was about to whisper something tender in her ear when she shuddered.

"What is it?" I asked concernedly.

"That plate in the ground. It says that on this spot Lady Jane Grey, Catharine Howard and others were executed."

We arose and walked away.

Crickenback continued to hang about Jeannette, and I saw that with her it was a case of interest versus love. I wished that I might find some method of turning the scale in my favor. I have usually been considered to have about me something of that resource for which we Americans are distinguished, but who ever heard of a man in love—really in love, I mean—being able to think dispassionately about anything concerning the winning or the losing of the girl he loves.

I met Wackford in London. He had just come over. Wackford and I have been bosom friends since we were little kids. A man in love needs some one to talk to, and I talked to Wackford. I told him the whole story. He listened to me attentively, sympathetically.

"What you want," he said when I had finished, "is some device by which you can save the young lady from herself—and for yourself, understand?"

"That's it exactly."

"Very well. You show me this Crockenback, or whatever his name is, and I'll see what I can do for you."

The very next afternoon I drove with Wackford in Rotten row, and we saw Crickenback. You can meet anybody that belongs to the upper classes in Rotten row.

"Why, the fellow wears a glass eye!" said Wackford.

"How do you know?"

"Can't I tell the difference between a glass and a real eye? Of course I can. There—see the sun shining on it! Do you suppose he has told her about it?"

"Don't know. I never heard her speak of it."

The next time I was with Jeannette I asked her, "Did Lord Crickenback ever speak of any misfortune, any mutilation?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing; at least nothing that it's my business to tell you."

"I insist upon knowing."

I demurred for awhile, then told her what Wackford had said about his lordship's glass eye.

"I don't believe it," she said.

"You'd better ask him," I replied.

"Ask him? Do you suppose I would do that?"

Every time I saw Crickenback after that my gaze was fastened willy nilly on his glass eye. I wondered if it had the same effect on Jeannette. I asked Wackford when he was going to give me the device he had referred to, and he replied:

"Don't know. Did you tell her about his glass eye?"

I admitted that I had, and Wackford turned the subject.

Whatever was the cause, Lord Crickenback from this time seemed to be losing ground with Jeannette. As he lost I gained. Then I perked up and played indifferent. This was followed by a coldness between Jeannette and me in which she seemed saddened, and eventually came a reconciliation. I determined to strike while the iron was hot and made it a condition of my forgiveness for her defection from me to Crickenback that we should be married at once.

We were married in London, Wackford being my best man. I insisted on a wedding trip to Italy, but since it was not now the season for visiting the far south we contented ourselves with Lake Como. While out in a boat one evening, pulled by an Italian oarsman who could not understand English, I asked my wife to make a clean breast of her part of the coming of Lord Crickenback between us.

"I was not in love with him," she said, "but a title to a woman is very tempting. I thought how nice it would be to be called Lady Crickenback and to be introduced to the real English nobility."

"And why didn't you do it?" I asked.

"Because I loved you, of course."

"How did you happen to come to a decision that you would rather have be and love than a title and no love?"

"You insist in knowing?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, it was the glass eye."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes. For my life whenever I saw him after you told me he had a glass eye I couldn't keep from looking at it whenever he was with me. At last it grew so repulsive that I had to send him away."

When he returned to London Wackford called on us.

"By the bye, Wack," I said, "by giving me the fact of Crickenback's wearing a glass eye you fixed me up with Jeannette."

"He has two now."

"What do you mean by that? Is he stone blind?"

"No; he has left off his monocle and has taken on a pair."

I looked at Jeannette, and Jeannette looked at me; then we smiled.

"You wanted me to suggest something," said Wackford, "to break the Crickenback spell, and I gave you the glass eye, which is synonymous with eyeglass. You owe me one."

Heirlooms.

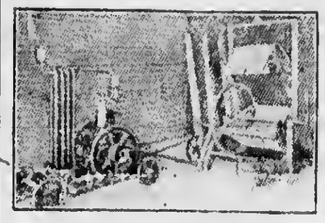
POWER CONCRETE MIXER.

Homemade Device That Is Useful on the Farm.

Of interest to farmers who need cement for any purpose, such as laying floors or walks or making posts, is a bulletin issued by the Colorado experiment station which tells of mixing concrete by machinery and prints the accompanying illustration of a homemade mixer, which is described thus:

Two pieces of 4 by 6 form the sills. Upon these two uprights about three feet high are fastened. A one and one-half inch pipe passes through holes bored in the top of the uprights. Upon this pipe the mixing box is turned, and through the pipe the water is added to the mixture at the desired time. The water is poured in at the top of the upright pipe and flows down and out through holes which are drilled in the lower side of it. The other end of the pipe is closed by a wooden plug.



POWER CONCRETE MIXER

The ends of the box are made of pieces of 2 by 8 bolted together. A hole bored in the center of each end forms the bearings. The sides of the box are made of one inch lumber and are simply nailed to the ends with twelvepenny nails. One-half of the box is made so that it can be detached and lifted off when the mixer is to be filled or emptied. The detachable half is secured to the other half by means of strong hooks so placed that by slipping this half about an inch to one side all of the hooks are loosened at once. After it is in position the removable portion is held in place by means of a barn door latch.

The driving gear is simple, but very effective. It consists of the rim taken from the wheel of an old rubber tire buggy. With the tire removed the grooved rim makes a very satisfactory wheel upon which to run a three-quarter inch rope belt. The belt is driven by a small sheave pulley, which is fastened to the countershaft. A belt tightener is used upon the rope, and by using a very loose belt the tightener is made to act as a friction clutch. This particular mixer is driven by a two horse gasoline engine, which is belted to the countershaft. The engine runs continuously, and the mixer is started and stopped by means of the belt tightener.

Many other systems of driving might have been used in place of the rope belt. The main gear of an old self binder makes an excellent gear for a mixer. An old mower gear may also be put to good use in this connection. It is not necessary to have the mixer driven by an engine or horse power. A crank may be attached and the machine turned by hand. Many prefer turning such a machine rather than mixing the concrete with a shovel.

CITY MEN FOR FARMS.

Many Would Make Good Hired Hands if They Had Chance.

Many farmers throughout the country find it a difficult matter to get hired hands, while in the great cities there are thousands of men out of work. The problem of inducing some of the down and outs of city life to go out on the farms is claiming the attention of social students.

A commission of the New York legislature recently has been making an inquiry into the matter, though it has not taken up the subject exhaustively. John Mitchell, the noted labor leader, was present at one of the sessions and made suggestions.

The chief trouble seems to be that those in the cities who are always deep in poverty know nothing of country life, seldom if ever having seen the green fields. They were born to their conditions and know nothing else.

Thousands of these men, no doubt, if they should be taken out and given jobs on farms would return to the city as soon as they earned money enough. That is because the city sights and sounds have become second nature to them. They would pine for the filth and furore of their native element.

But, on the other hand, there is no doubt that many men in the cities would welcome a chance to get away to the country for themselves and their families and would develop into excellent farm hands. The problem is to put these men in touch with farmers who need them.

Diseases of Fowls.

Most of the diseases that afflict fowls are the result of carelessness and indifference on the part of the owner as regards the surroundings and conditions of his poultry. No poultry will show to advantage on the credit side of the cash account unless they are healthy and well cared for. How to prevent disease should be the watchword rather than how to cure disease.

Beef and Dairy Cattle.

When a dairyman has faced the actual practice of selling cows from his herd for beef he will not feel encouraged over the outlook of combining beef and dairy qualities in the same herd. There is a popular prejudice against eating beef from an old, played out dairy cow, and there is no advantage in trying to combine the two qualities in one animal.

TOWNSEND OPPOSITE OF BURROWS

Grand Rapids Evening Press Gives Reason for Support

Of the Man from Jackson—Record Proves Him a Fearless Advocate in Behalf of the People.

The questioas which coafront the nation today do not pale in comparison with those of any period in our history. Not even thosg which shook the foundations of the Union in 1861 were more important to the well being of our people. The square deal for the common people—proper control of the giaut corporations, mighty instruments of modern industry, revolutionizing economic conditioas and introducing a new era; but full of danger—the control of monopolies—fair regulation of trausportation charges—the curbing of trusts—the conservation for the benefit of the whole people of our rapidly decreasing natural resources—the emancipation of the people politically from the rule of the bosses and the corruptionists—all these are of vital movement not only to us of the present generation, but to the generations which are to come. The mere enumeration of them shows the seriousness of the situation. On the one side, united by the bonds of self interest we see those fortified by special privilege, intrenched behind laws of their own making, with, in too many instances the courts as their allies, with a grip on legislatures and even on congress itself, with the political machinery of the country largely in their control, and with that command over men and affairs which power and privilege and money always have had and will always possess. On the other side are the people armed only with the ballot. The contest is unequal. It will not be settled by an unequal. It will not be settled by a single brush at the polls nor by a single victory in the courts, but will be long and hard.

It seems as if nothing could be plainer than the question presented to the voters of Michigan in this contest. On the one side is Mr. Burrows whose record and alliaaces in the senate show him to be the friend and supporter of privilege and the elements opposed to the people's interests. He is not a corrupt man nor conciously an enemy of the people. He is one of those whom Mr. Pinchot recently alluded to as having been trained in a wrong school, who have grown old in the belief that money has the right to rule, and cannot understand the point of view of men who recognize in the corrupt political activity of a trust a dangerous kind of treason to government by the people. His votes on the tariff schedules show it. His childlike faith in Mr. Aldrich shows it. It is shown in his affiliation with the business and political elements which are backing him in this campaign for re-election. It is for these reasons that The Press feels compelled to oppose him as a matter of public duty.

On the other side is Mr. Townsend, whose record side shows that in his attitude towards these things he is the direct opposite of Mr. Burrows. No other man whom Michigan has sent to Washington in years has loomed so large in the public eye as a constructive legislator. Few men have made so thorough a study of railroad problems. He was the real author of the Hepburn law, and was the only member of the house that Mr. Taft called into consultation in preparing the railroad measures submitted at the recent session. To him was intrusted the administration bill in the house. In congress he has shown himself a leader and has been thoroughly independent. He has stood for the people in legislative matters and refused to be dominated by the bosses. He enjoys the confidence of Mr. Taft and of Mr. Roosevelt. In his campaign for the senatorship he places himself squarely on the side of the people.

Will the voters choose for their senator a champion of their own cause, or will they for sentimental reasons retain one who is notoriously opposed to their interests? This is the real issue and the main issue of the primary campaign.—Grand Rapids Evening Paess, July 27, 1910.

PROGRESS OF WORK

At Plant of Standard Cement & Lime Company.

The Installation of Machinery Will Commence Next Week.

During the past week Judge Aldrich, president; secretary Buell and Consulting engineer Soper of the Standard Cement & Lime Co., have been in the city looking over the work which has been done at the plant.

At the present time, thirty-five men are employed and the work is progressing rapidly, in clearing and grading the grounds. The Hydrate of lime building is nearly ready for the installation of the machinery which has been ordered and will arrive next week, so that this part of the manufacturing will commence September first. The railroad siding from the Pere Marquette is now in course of construction, the grading going on rapidly and ties being laid. The two-hundred ton crusher is expected in sixty days, and other machinery will continue to come as the buildings are prepared to receive it.

Engineer Sloan, and assistants, have pushed the work every minute since the first start was made, and during the short time they have been at work, have made rapid progress. The plant when fully completed, will be a model one. The industry which we have long looked for is now and established fact, and the shipping of products will soon commence.

KILLED BY CARS

Simon and Jerry Paul, Indians, Were Last Week

Bodies Were Found by Three Young Boys.

Three young lads on their way to Boy City, Charlevoix, missed their connection here with the Pere Marquette Tuesday night and started to walk, and almost half way between Petoskey and Bay Shore made a grewsome find along the railroad track Wednesday morning. Two Indians Simon and Jerry Paul, brothers, aged thirty-eight and fifteen years had been to Traverse City to receive their allotment from the government disbursing agent who has been paying off there.

Failing to get their portion through technicality, they took the train for home, and got off at Bay Shore, and started to walk to their stopping place near Crusherville. Just how it happened is not known, but about five o'clock this morning Amos Henika received a phone message from the boys saying they had found two Indians, who had evidently been killed by the trains, and with W. J. Tracy Mr. Henika went to the scene, and it is evident from the condition that the men had been sitting or lying on the track, and the late p. m. dummy train from Petoskey to Charlevoix had struck them. One had been struck and thrown from the track and his head crushed in, while the other had evidentaly been run over for his head and one leg had been cut off, and he was otherwise terribly ground up. The remains were brought to the Henika undertaking establishment where they will be prepared for burial, after the official inquest which will be held Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock. The men have no relatives here except some cousins who came in to see about their death this morning. The parents live at some distance, if alive at all, which is not known for certain.—Petoskey News.

ARE COMING BACK

Home-Seekers Who Have Been to Canadian Northwest.

Is the Opinion Expressed by the Reclamation Service.

The tide of emigration of home-seekers to Canada, which has been the subject of great concern to the administrator of the public domain for the past few years, has turned, in the opinion of officials of the reclamation service. Thousands have returned and a great many more are expected back soon.

Clarence J. Blanchard, statistician of the reclamation service, who is in the field inspecting irrigation projects, reports to the headquarters of the service that he has interviewed a great number of settlers in Montana who had tried the Canadian experiment, but were glad to return home. They stated that practically every American farmer in the neighborhood of Alberta, where the Canadian government maintains an irrigation project, was anxious to get back if he could sell his holdings in the domain.

The American settlers were dissatisfied with the character of the land; the crops from which, they insisted, consisted chiefly of alfalfa and such hardy grains as winter wheat and even these were not sure The form of government did not appeal to them and they considered the railway freight rates exorbitant. The climate also was a source of dissatisfaction, ice and snow in August and September of last year adding to their discontent.

During the last eight months, it was said at the reclamation service today, 15,000 settlers have returned to the states from Canada and the prospects for a general backward movement was bright.

If ever a candidate merited favorable consideration from the hands of the voters, our present county clerk, D. S. Payton, who is a candidate for renomination, does. Sun Brothers' Progressive Show.

With everything new but the name and title the (New) Sun Brother's Greater Progressive shows, will unfold their caravan of novelties, trained animal wonders and sensational displays, at Charlevoix on Monday, August 8. Complete performances will be offered, both afternoon and night, and the assurance is made by the management, that the latter performance will be equally as complete as the Matinee entertainment.

It is really the first good tented show of the season, and the obnoxious "Kid" and his curious sisters, too, will be early on the scene, to see the expectant elephant.

One thing that particularly commends the Sun Brothers show to the public is the fact, that no ticket scalpers, gambling devices, roper-in-schemes or any suggestive adjuncts are tolerated about the show. The only way that you can spend your money around this establishment is through legitimate channels. Several detectives accompany the Sun Brothers Shows on their travels, and they know every crook and thief of reputation in America, consequently these questionable gentry give the show grounds a wide berth, as they are locked up on sight. Ladies and children can safely attend either one of the performances, without escorts, as everything possible is done to look after their careful wants. There are courteous ushers to escort them to the most eligible seat.

In the animal tent attentive keepers and lecturers explain the different attractions and animals, and in fact from the humblest canvas man to the management, all vie to please their patrons.

At night time all of the tents and the entrances to the show grounds are brilliantly illuminated with massive Electro-Calcium generators. Good lights are in evidence all over the show lot, which fact alone makes it worthy of a visit to this show at night time.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS BY MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

CHAPTER I.

The Two Oaths.

On an afternoon in the early summer of 1856 Capt. Nathaniel Plum, master and owner of the sloop Typhoon, was engaged in nothing more important than the smoking of an enormous pipe. Clouds of strongly odored smoke, tinted with the lights of the setting sun, had risen above his head in unremitting volumes for the last half hour. There was infinite contentment in his face, notwithstanding the fact that he had been meditating on a subject that was not altogether pleasant. But Captain Plum was, in a way, a philosopher, though one would not have guessed this fact from his appearance. He was, in the first place, a young man, not more than eight or nine and twenty, and his strong, rather thin face, tanned by exposure to the sea, was just now lighted up by eyes that shone with an unbounded good humor which any instant might take the form of laughter.

At the present time Captain Plum's vision was confined to one direction, which carried his gaze out over Lake Michigan. Earlier in the day he had been able to discern the hazy outline of the Michigan wilderness 20 miles to the eastward. Straight ahead, shooting up rugged and sharp in the red light of the day's end, were two islands. Between these, three miles away, the sloop Typhoon was strongly silhouetted in the fading glow. Beyond the islands and the sloop there were no other objects for Captain Plum's eyes to rest upon. So far as he could see there was no other sail. At his back he was shut in by a dense growth of trees and creeping vines, and unless a small boat edged close in around the end of Beaver island his place of concealment must remain undiscovered. At least this seemed an assured fact to Captain Plum.

In the security of his position he began to whistle softly as he beat the bowl of his pipe on his boot heel to empty it of ashes. Then he drew a long-barreled revolver from under a coat that he had thrown aside and examined it carefully to see that the powder and ball were in solid and that none of the caps was missing. From the same place he brought forth a belt, buckled it round his waist, shoved the revolver into its holster, and dragging the coat to him, fished out a letter from an inside pocket. It was a dirty, much-worn letter. Perhaps he had read it a score of times. He read it again now, and then, refilling his pipe, settled back against the rock that formed a rest for his shoulders and turned his eyes in the direction of the sloop.

The last rim of the sun had fallen below the Michigan wilderness and in the rapidly increasing gloom the sloop was becoming indistinguishable. Captain Plum looked at his watch. He must still wait a little longer before setting out upon the adventure that had brought him to this isolated spot. He rested his head against the rock, and thought. He had been thinking for hours. Back in the thicket he heard the prowling of some small animal. There came the sleepy chirp of a bird and the rustling of tired wings settling for the night. A strange stillness hovered about him, and with it there came over him a loneliness that was chilling, a loneliness that made him homesick. It was a new and unpleasant sensation to Captain Plum. He could not remember just when he had experienced it before; that is, if he dated the present from two weeks ago tonight. It was then that the letter had been handed to him in Chicago, and it had been a weight upon his soul and a prick to his conscience ever since. Once or twice he had made up his mind to destroy it, but each time he had repented at the last moment. In a sudden revulsion at his weakness he pulled himself together, crumpled the dirty missive into a ball and flung it out upon the white rim of beach.

At this action there came a quick movement in the dense wall of verdure behind him. Noiselessly the tangle of vines separated and a head thrust itself out in time to see the bit of paper fall short of the water's edge. Then the head shot back as swiftly and as silently as a serpent's. Perhaps Captain Plum heard the gloating chuckle that followed the movement, if so he thought it only some night bird in the brush.

"Heigh-ho!" he exclaimed, with some return of his old cheer, "it's about time we were starting!" He jumped to his feet and began brushing the sand from his clothes. When he had done, walked out upon the rim of bench and stretched himself until his arm bones cracked.

Again the hidden head shot forth from its concealment. A sudden turn and Captain Plum would certainly have been startled. For it was a weird object, this spying head; its face dead-white against the dense green of the verdure, with shocks of long white hair hanging down on each side, framing between them a pair of eyes that gleamed from enormous sockets, like black glowing beads. There was unmistakable fear, a tense anxiety in those glittering eyes as Captain Plum walked toward the paper, but when he paused and stretched himself, the sole of his boot carelessly trampling the discarded letter, the head disappeared again and there came another satisfied bird-like chuckle from the gloom of the thicket.

Captain Plum now put on his coat, buttoned it close to conceal the weapons in his belt, and walked along the narrow water-run that crept like a white ribbon between the lake and the island wilderness. No sooner had he disappeared than the bushes and vines behind the rock were torn asunder and a man wormed his way through them. For an instant he paused, listening for returning footsteps, and then with startling agility darted to the beach and seized the crumpled letter.

The person who for the greater part of the afternoon had been spying upon Captain Plum from the security of the thicket was to all appearances a very small and a very old man, though there was something about him that seemed to belie a first guess at his age. His face was emaciated; his hair was white and hung in straggling masses on his shoulders; his hooked nose bore apparently the infallible stamp of extreme age. Yet there was a strange sad uncanny strength and quickness in his movements. There was no stoop in his shoulders. His head was set squarely. His eyes were as keen as steel. It would have been impossible to have told whether he was fifty or seventy. Eagerly he smoothed out the abused missive and evidently succeeded even in the failing light in deciphering much of it, for the glimmer of a smile flashed over his thin features as he thrust the paper into his pocket.

Without a moment's hesitation he set out on the trail of Captain Plum. A quarter of a mile down the path he overtook the object of his pursuit.

"Ah, how do you do, sir?" he greeted as the younger man turned about upon hearing his approach. "A mighty fast pace you're setting for an old man, sir!" He broke into a laugh that was not altogether unpleasant, and boldly held out a hand. "We've been expecting you, but—not in this way. I hope there's nothing wrong?"

Captain Plum had accepted the proffered hand. Its coldness and the singular appearance of the old man who had come like an apparition chilled him. In a moment, however, it occurred to him that he was a victim of mistaken identity. As far as he knew there was no one on Beaver island who was expecting him. To the best of his knowledge he was a fool for being there. His crew aboard the sloop had agreed upon that point with extreme vehemence and to a man had attempted to dissuade him from the mad project upon which he was launching himself among the Mormons in their island stronghold. All this came to him while the little old man was looking up into his face, chuckling, and shaking his hand as if he were one of the most important and most greatly to be desired personages in the world.

"Hope there's nothing wrong, Cap'n?" he repeated.

"Right as a trivet here, dad," replied the young man, dropping the cold hand that still persisted in clinging to his own. "But I guess you've got the wrong party. Who's expecting me?"

It Was a Dirty, Much-Worn Letter.

The old man's face wrinkled itself in a grimace and one gleaming eye opened and closed in an understanding wink.

"Ho ho, ho!—of course you're not expected. Anyway, you're not expected to be expected! Cautious—a born general!—mighty clever thing to do. Strang should appreciate it." The old man gave vent to his own approbation in a series of inimitable chuckles. "Is that your sloop out there?" he inquired interestedly.

Something in the strangeness of the situation began to interest Captain Plum. He had planned a little adventure of his own, but here was one that promised to develop into something more exciting. He nodded his head.

"That's her."

"Splendid cargo," went on the old man. "Splendid cargo, eh?"

"Pretty fair."

"Powder in good shape, eh?"

"Dry as tinder."

"And balls—lots of balls, and a few guns, eh?"

"Yes, we have a few guns," said Captain Plum. The old man noted the emphasis, but the darkness that had fast settled about them hid the added meaning that passed in a curious look over the other's face.

"Odd way to come in, though—very nice!" continued the old man, gurgling and shaking as if the thought of it occasioned him great merriment. "Very cautious. Level business head. Want to know that things are on the square, eh?"

"That's it!" exclaimed Captain Plum, catching at the proffered straw. Inwardly he was wondering when his feet would touch bottom. Thus far he had succeeded in getting but a single grip on the situation. Somebody was expected at Beaver island with powder and balls and guns. Well, he had a certain quantity of these materials aboard his sloop, and if he could make an agreeable bargain—

The old man interrupted the plan that was slowly forming itself in Captain Plum's puzzled brain.

"It's the price, eh?" He laughed shrewdly. "You want to see the color of the gold before you land the goods. I'll show it to you. I'll pay you the whole sum tonight. Then you'll take the stuff where I tell you to. Eh? Isn't that so?" He darted ahead of Captain Plum with a quick alert movement. "Will you please follow me, sir?"

For an instant Captain Plum's impulse was to hold back. In that instant it suddenly occurred to him that he was lending himself to a rank imposition. At the same time he was filled with a desire to go deeper into the adventure, and his blood thrilled with the thought of what it might hold for him.

"Are you coming, sir?"

The little old man had stopped a dozen paces away and turned expectantly.

"I tell you again that you've got the wrong man, dad!"

"Will you follow me, sir?"

"Well, if you'll have it so—damned if I won't!" cried Captain Plum. He felt that he had relieved his conscience, anyway. If things should develop badly for him during the next few hours no one could say that he had lied. So he followed light-heartedly after the old man, his eyes and ears alert, and his right hand, by force of habit, reaching under his coat to the butt of his pistol. His guide said not another word until they had traveled for half an hour along a twisting path and stood at last on the bald summit of a knoll from which they could look down upon a number of lights twinkling dimly a quarter of a mile away. One of these lights gleamed above all the others, like a beacon set among fireflies.

"That's St. James," said the old man. His voice had changed. It was low and soft, as though he feared to speak above a whisper.

"St. James!"

The young man at his side gazed down silently upon the scattered lights, his heart throbbing in a sudden tumult of excitement. He had set out that day with the idea of resting his eyes on St. James. In its silent mystery the town now lay at his feet.

"And that light—" spoke the old man. He pointed a trembling arm toward the glare that shone more powerfully than the others. "That light marks the sacred home of the king!" His voice had again changed. A metallic hardness came into it, his words were vibrant with a strange excitement which he strove hard to conceal. It was still light enough for Captain Plum to see that the old man's black, beady eyes were startlingly alive with newly aroused emotion.

"You mean—"

"Strang!"

He started rapidly down the knoll and there floated back to Captain Plum the soft notes of his meaningless chuckle. A dozen rods farther on his mysterious guide turned into a by-path which led them to another knoll, capped by a good-sized building made of logs. There sounded the grating of a key in a lock, the shooting of a bolt, and a door opened to admit them.

"You will pardon me if I don't light up," apologized the old man as he led the way in. "A candle will be sufficient. You know there must be privacy in these matters—always. Eh? Isn't that so?"

Captain Plum followed without reply. He guessed that the cabin was made up of one large room, and that at the present time, at least, it possessed no other occupant than the singular creature who had guided him to it.

"It is just as well, on this particular night, that no light is seen at the window," continued the old man as he rummaged about a table for a match and a candle. "I have a little corner back here that a candle will brighten up nicely and no one in the world will know it. Ho, ho, ho!—how nice it is to have a quiet little corner sometimes! Eh, Captain Plum?"

At the sound of his name Captain Plum started as though an unexpected hand had suddenly been laid upon him. So he was expected, after all, and his name was known! For a moment his surprise robbed him of the power of speech. The little old man had lighted his candle, and, grinning back over his shoulder, passed through a narrow cut in the wall that could hardly be called a door and planted his light on a table that stood in the center of a small room, or closet, not more than five feet square. Then he coolly pulled Captain Plum's old letter from his pocket and smoothed it out in the dim light.

"Be seated, Captain Plum; right over there—opposite me. So!"

He continued for a moment to smooth out the creases in the letter and then proceeded to read it with as much assurance as though its owner were a thousand miles away instead of within arm's reach of him. Captain Plum was dumbfounded. He felt the hot blood rushing to his face and his first impulse was to recover the crumpled paper and demand something more than an explanation. In the next instant it occurred to him that this action would probably spoil whatever possibilities his night's ad-

Auditor General Fuller has made comparisons this year of the taxes collected with those of last year which show that the counties of the state pay about the same proportion of the tax assessed each year. In 42 counties the ratio of payment for the two years was exactly the same. This goes to show, he says that some people always pay their taxes.

A meeting of the Good Citizenship League held at the Presbyterian church Wednesday evening called out a good attendance and showed that the local-option workers have not lost their interest in the cause that brought them into organization. Several motions were made and passed; but the principal thing accomplished was the election by ballot of six members of the newly formed county organization. W. P. Porter, E. A. Lewis, W. W. Lamport, Clark Haire, Frank Porter and E. J. Crossman were chosen to represent East Jordan at the county meeting in Charlevoix next Monday, and thereafter during the year. Mr. Frank Scott of Alpena, who was in the audience, was called upon for a speech and responded with a good sensible talk on local option. Mr. Scott commended very highly the manner in which the law has been enforced in this county and the good effects resulting therefrom.—East Jordan Herald.

Build Many Good Roads.

The annual report of the highway commissioner when completed will show that Michigan has spent more for good roads than ever before in her history. Since July 1, 1909, the state has expended in awards for parts of new highways $138,319. Of this large sum only between $11,000 and $12,000 is for roads constructed in 1908.

The awards which the state has paid runs from $250 to $1,000 per mile. The former is the price paid for clay gravel road and the latter for macadam. It is also very noticeable that mere counties are building more macadam each year.

By far the largest amount of good roads in the state have been built in Saginaw county. There is some trouble being experienced there, however, because the quality of stone used was not as good as it might have been and because it is extremely difficult to find a firm foundation for a roadway in many parts of the country. The universal tendancy throughout the state seems to be in favor of the highest class of stone roads.

Neighborhood Notes

According to the annual report of the Michigan railway commission, now being prepared by Commissioner Glasgow, the physical condition of the rail roads of the state shows a great improvement over previous years. The installation of safety devices, the protection of street and highway crossings, better condition of the roadbeds, use of heavier rails and closer attention by employes to rules and regulations all contribute to the greater safety in handling the public as statistics will show.

The number of passengers carried on steam roads in the state during the year ending December 31, 1908, was 19,127,191; while the electric roads reported 197,973,687 passengers carried, making a total of 217,100,878. This amount was greatly increased for the year ending December 31, 1909, as statistics show that the steam roads carried 20,607,798 passengers, while the electric roads increased the number 219,869,569 more, making a total for the year of 240,477,267, or an increased number over 1908 of 23,376,389 passengers.

The report also shows a decided decrease in the number of passengers killed as compared with the previous year. In 1908 fifty-two passengers were killed, or one out of every 4,157,007 carried, and in 1909 only 17 were killed, or one person out of every 14,145,721 passengers carried.

The total amount of passenger fares collected on all steam roads in the state for 1909 amounted to $13,820,875.04, and the total earnings of the steam road passenger trains from all sources was $17,260,472.88.

The electric lines, including the interurban lines did a fine business for 1909, as the report shows the total number of passenger fares collected to be 89,723,831.93, and the same lines showed earnings, including passenger fares, of $10,674,050.86. The total freight revenue of the steam lines for 1909 was $37,300,139.22.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau has placed an order with Poole Brothers of Chicago for 150,000 copies of a 48-page and cover booklet. This booklet which will be issued in behalf of the advertisement of Western Michigan, will be the finest piece of advertising of its kind yet put out by any similar organization in this state. The cover will be in four colors and on the face there will be a design which includes a map of the twenty counties that have banded together for mutual aid. The booklet will be entirely free of real estate advertising.

A meeting of the board of directors of the Western Michigan Development bureau is to be held early in September for the purpose of starting the fall campaign with a goodly supply of enthusiasm. Each director is to be asked to bring with him to the meeting as optimistic a development report from his county as possible. Each director is also expected to be informed as to what contributions his section of Western Michigan can make towards the exhibit for the great Chicago Land Show to be held in November.

THIS IS CERTAIN

The Proof That Charlevoix Readers Cannot Deny.

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands of people testify that Doan's Kidney pills cure permanently.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they had derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

W. E. Van Camp, 115 E. St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "I was subject to severe pains in my back and if I caught cold, I suffered more intensely. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I obtained a supply and it did not take them long to cure me. I am pleased to give this remedy the praise it deserves." Statement given August 21, 1908.

GOOD REASON FOR RE-ENDORSEMENT

On August 3, 1908 Mr. Van Camp said: "The public statement I gave in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills some years ago still holds good." My cure has been permanent."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Just a Little Mother

She's just a little mother in a cabin far away;
Since I kissed her in the gloaming 'tis forever and a day.
In my dreams I hear her calling, calling o'er the weary sea,
"Come ye back to Ballyshannon, Katy dear, come back to me."
She's standing in the doorway, filling up the little space,
With the kerchief in her bosom and the frills around her face;
She is smiling as Our Lady smiles above the Holy Child.
And my heart runs forth to meet her, o'er the waste of water's wild.
Do you know our Ballyshannon, where the very winds are sweet
With the saltness of the sea foam and the tang of smoldering peat?
Do you know our mists that fold us in a blanket soft and gray,
Do you know our Ballyshannon in the red-rose dawn of day?
Then you've seen the little mother, just herself, so small and old.
With a look I'm sure would warm you were you shivering with the cold.
Oh, so mirthful and so patient, she whose work is never done.
Oh, so ready with her laughter, at the raise and set of sun.
In the great house where I'm serving, folk are ever kind to me.
But they do not guess my yearning for the cabin over sea.
Wage I earn and wage I send her. Yet I cannot longer hide.
I must seek my little mother, I must nestle at her side.
She's just a little mother in a cabin far away;
Since I kissed her in the gloaming 'tis forever and a day.
In my dreams she's calling, calling!

"Mother, darling, yes, I'll come I'll go back to Ballyshannon to my mother and my home."

FRONT YARD DRAINAGE.

How a Little Work May Do Away With Going to Law.

Thought spent on the drainage of the front yard reaps many returns. If you are on the same grade as your neighbors you are entitled, according to law, to allow all water that naturally flows that way to run over on your neighbors, but in actual practice it does not pay, as there are always disputes as to whether it naturally runs over on them. On this account it is advisable that you build into the yard your own inlets in order to take away all your own surface water. It is to be presumed that your house water pipes from the roof all lead into the sewer and that the sewer runs out to the street through your own yard. This being the case, set small copper inlets in the walks at thirty foot distances leading to terra cotta pipes which empty into the sewer.

At intervals over the yard about thirty foot centers set inlets of galvanized iron, square in shape, at a height that will be flush with your sod when the yard is settled. Allow two inches for this, although in three or four years there generally has to be a shortening of the terra cotta pipes to fit the shrinkage—an easy job. These inlets should be so set that they will catch the storm water from extra heavy rains. There can be no rule given about it. An engineer can give you the exact spot for each, but an intelligent gardener can also do it. Study the lay of the land and decide how the water will run, and at the point, such as a corner, where it will meet with some obstacle to dam it back set an inlet.

Ordinarily there need be no outlet to the drainage in the beds and borders, but in a yard more than two feet higher on one side than the other in a fifty foot lot the trench at the lower side should have an inlet set in the front flower end, connected with the sewer, or there will be trouble to grow fine plants there. Plants will stand all kinds of neglect, but none can aquatics will stand "wet feet."—Dellaeator For May.

The Courage of Captain Plum

venture might have for him. So he held his peace. The old man was so intent in his perusal of the letter that the end of his hooked nose almost scraped the table. He went over the dim, partly obliterated words line by line, chuckling now and then, and apparently utterly oblivious of the other's presence. When he had come to the end he looked up, his eyes glittering with unbounded satisfaction, carefully folded the letter, and handed it to Captain Plum.

"That's the best introduction in the world, Captain Plum—the very best! Ho, ho!—it couldn't be better. I'm glad I found it." He chuckled gleefully, and rested his ogrish head in the palms of his skeleton-like hands, his elbows on the table. "So you're going back home—soon?"

"I haven't made up my mind yet, dad," responded Captain Plum, pulling out his pipe and tobacco. "You've read the letter pretty carefully, I guess. What would you do?"

"Vermont?" questioned the old man shortly.

"That's it."

"Well, I'd go, and very soon, Captain Plum, very soon, indeed. Yes, I'd hurry!" The old man jumped up with the quickness of a cat. So sudden was his movement that it startled Captain Plum, and he dropped his tobacco pouch. By the time he had recovered this article his strange companion was back in his seat again holding a leather bag in his hand. Quickly he untied the knot at its top and poured a torrent of glittering gold pieces out upon the table.

"Business—business and gold," he gurgled happily, rubbing his thin hands and twisting his fingers until they cracked. "A pretty sight, eh, Captain Plum? Now, to our account! A hundred carbines, eh? And a thousand of powder and a ton of balls. Or is it in lead? It doesn't make any difference—not a bit. It's three thousand, that's the account, eh?" He fell to counting rapidly.

For a full minute Captain Plum remained in stupefied bewilderment, silenced by the sudden and unexpected turn his adventure had taken. Fascinated, he watched the skeleton fingers as they clinked the gold pieces. What was the mysterious plot into which he had allowed himself to be drawn? Why were a hundred guns and a ton and a half of powder and balls wanted by the Mormons of Beaver Island? Instinctively he reached out and closed his hand over the counting fingers of the old man. Their eyes met. And there was a shrewd, half-understanding gleam in the black orbs that fixed Captain Plum in an unflinching challenge. For a little space there was silence. It was Captain Plum who broke it.

"Dad, I'm going to tell you for the third and last time that you've made a mistake. I've got eight of the best rifles in America aboard my sloop out there. But there's a man for every gun. And I've got something hidden away underdeck that would blow up St. James in half an hour. And there is powder and ball for the whole outfit. But that's all. I'll sell you what I've got—for a good price. Beyond that you've got the wrong man!"

He settled back and blew a volume of smoke from his pipe. For another half minute the old man continued to look at him, his eyes twinkling, and then he fell to counting again.

Captain Plum was not given over to the habit of cursing. But now he jumped to his feet with an oath that jarred the table. The old man chuckled. The gold pieces clinked between his fingers. Coolly he shoved two glittering piles alongside the candle stick, tumbled the rest back into the leather bag, deliberately tied the end, and smiled up into the face of the exasperated captain.

"To be sure you're not the man," he said, nodding his head until his elf-locks danced around his face. "Of course you're not the man. I know it—ho, ho! you can wager that I know it! A little ruse of mine, Captain Plum. Pardonable—excusable, eh? I wanted to know if you were a liar. I wanted to see if you were honest."

With a gasp of astonishment Captain Plum sank back into his chair. His jaw dropped and his pipe was held fireless in his hand.

"The devil you say!"

"Oh, certainly, certainly, if you wish it," chuckled the little man, in high humor. "I would have visited your sloop today, Captain Plum, if you hadn't come ashore so opportunely this morning. Ho, ho, ho! a good joke, eh? A mighty good joke!"

Captain Plum regained his composure by relighting his pipe. He heard the clink of gold pieces and when he looked again the two piles of money were close to the edge of his side of the table.

"That's for you, Captain Plum. There's a just $1,000 in those two piles." There was tense earnestness now in the old man's face and voice. "I've imposed on you," he continued, speaking as one who had suddenly thrown off a disguise. "If it had been any other man it would have been the same. I want help. I want an honest man. I want a man whom I can trust. I will give you a thousand dollars if you will take a package back to your vessel with you and will promise to deliver it as quickly as you can."

"I'll do it!" cried Captain Plum. He jumped to his feet and held out his hand. But the old man slipped from his chair and darted swiftly out into the blackness of the adjoining room. As he came back Captain Plum could hear his insane chuckling.

"Franklin Pierce, president of the United States of America," he repeated, as though there had been no interruption since his companion's question. "The package is to be delivered to him. Now you must excuse me. An important matter calls me out for a short time. But I will be back soon—oh, yes, very soon. And you will wait for me. You will wait for me here, and then I will take you to St. James."

He was gone in a quick hopping way, like a cricket, and the last that Captain Plum saw of him was his ghostly face turned back for an instant in the darkness of the next room, and after that the soft patter of his feet and the strange chuckle in his throat traveled to the outer door and died away as he passed out into the night. Nathaniel Plum was not a man to be easily startled, but there was something so unusual about the proceedings in which he was as yet playing a blind part that he forgot to smoke, which was saying much. Who was the old man? Was he mad? His eyes scanned the little room and an exclamation of astonishment fell from his lips when he saw the leather bag, partly filled with gold, lying where his mysterious acquaintance had dropped it. Surely this was madness or else another ruse to test his honesty. The discovery thrilled him. It was wonderfully quiet out in that next room and very dark. Were hidden eyes guarding that bag? Well, if so, he would give their owner to understand that he was not a thief. He rose from his chair and moved toward the bag, lifted it in his hand, and tossed it back again so that the gold in it clinked loudly. Then he went to the narrow aperture and blocked it with his body and listened until he knew that if there had been human life in the room he would have heard it.

The outer door was opened and through it there came to him the soft breath of the night air and the sweetness of balsam and wild flowers. It struck him that it would be pleasanter waiting outside than in, and it would undoubtedly make no difference to Obadiah Price. In front of the cabin he found the stump of a log and seating himself on it where the clear light of the stars fell full upon him he once more began his interrupted smoke. It seemed to him that he had waited a long time when he heard the sound of footsteps. They came rapidly as if the person was half running. Hardly had he located the direction of the sound when a figure appeared in the opening and hurried toward the door of the cabin. A dozen yards from him it paused for a moment and turned partly about, as if inspecting the path over which it had come. With a greeting whistle Captain Plum jumped to his feet. He heard a little throat note, which was not the chuckling of Obadiah Price, and the figure ran almost into his arms. A sudden knowledge of having made a mistake drew Captain Plum a pace backward. For scarcely more than five seconds he found himself staring into the white terrified face of a girl. Eyes wide and glowing with sudden fright met his own. Instinctively he lifted his hand to his hat, but before he could speak the girl sprang back with a low cry and ran swiftly down the path that led into the gloom of the woods.

For several minutes Captain Plum stood as if the sudden apparition had petrified him. He listened long after the sound of retreating footsteps had died away. There remained behind a faint sweet odor of lilac which stirred his soul and set his blood fighting. It was a beautiful face that he had seen. He was sure of that and yet he could have given no good verbal proof of it. Only the eyes and the odor of lilac remained with him and after a little the lilac drifted away. Then he went back to the log and sat down. He smiled as he thought of the joke that he had unwittingly played on Obadiah. From his knowledge of the Beaver Island Mormons he was satisfied that the old man who displayed gold in such reckless profusion was anything but a bachelor. In all probability this was one of his wives and the cabin behind him, he concluded, was for some reason isolated from the harem. "Evidently that little fairness is not a flirt," he concluded, "or she would have given me time to speak to her."

The continued absence of Obadiah Price began to fill Captain Plum with impatience. After an hour's wait he reentered the cabin and made his way to the little room, where the candle was still burning dimly. To his astonishment he beheld the old man sitting beside the table. His thin face was propped between his hands and his eyes were closed as if he was asleep. They shot open instantly on Captain Plum's appearance.

"I've been waiting for you, Nat," he cried, straightening himself with spring-like quickness. "Waiting for you a long time, Nat!" He rubbed his hands and chuckled at his own familiarity. "I saw you out there enjoying yourself; What did you think of her, Nat?" He winked with such audacious glee that, despite his own astonishment, Captain Plum burst into a laugh. Obadiah Price held up a warning hand. "Tut, tut, not so loud!" he admonished. His face was a map of wrinkles. His little black eyes shone with sleet laughter. There was no doubt but that he was immensely pleased over something. "Tell me, Nat—why did you come to St. James?"

He leaned forward over the table, his odd white head almost resting on it, and twiddled his thumbs with wonderful rapidity. "Eh, Nat?" he urged. "Why did you come?"

"Because it was too hot and uninteresting lying out there in a calm, dad," replied the master of the Typhoon. "We've been roasting for 36

"Business — business — business —" he gurgled. "Eh, Captain Plum? Did you ever take an oath?" He tossed a book on the table. It was the Bible.

Captain Plum understood. He reached for the book and held it under his left hand. His right he lifted above his head, while a smile played about his lips.

"I suppose you want to place me under oath to deliver that package," he said.

The old man nodded. His eyes gleamed with a feverish glare. A sudden hectic flush had gathered in his death-like cheeks. He trembled. His voice rose barely above a whisper.

"Repeat," he commanded. "I, Captain Nathaniel Plum, do solemnly swear before God—"

A thrilling inspiration shot into Captain Plum's brain.

"Hold!" he cried. He lowered his hand. With something that was almost a snarl the old man sprang back, his hands clenched. "I will take this oath upon one other consideration," continued Captain Plum. "I came to Beaver Island to see something of the life and something of the people of St. James. If you, in turn, will swear to show me as much as you can tonight I will take the oath."

The old man was beside the table again in an instant.

"I will show it to you—all—all—" he exclaimed excitedly. "I will show

"That's for You, Captain Plum."

it to you—yes, and swear to it upon the Body of Christ!"

Captain Plum lifted his hand again and word by word repeated the oath. When it was done the other took his place.

"Your name?" asked Captain Plum.

A change scarcely perceptible swept over the old man's face.

"Obadiah Price."

"But you are a Mormon. You have the Bible there?"

Again the old man disappeared into the adjoining room. When he returned he placed two books side by side and stood them on edge so that he might clasp both between his bony fingers. One was the Bible, the other the Book of the Mormons. In a cracked, excited voice he repeated the strenuous oath improvised by Captain Plum.

"Now," said Captain Plum, distributing the gold pieces among his pockets, "I'll take that package."

This time the old man was gone for several minutes. When he returned he placed a small package tightly bound and sealed into his companion's hand.

"More precious than your life, more priceless than gold," he whispered tensely, "yet worthless to all but the one to whom it is to be delivered."

There were no marks on the package.

"And who is that?" asked Captain Plum.

The old man came so close that his breath fell hot upon the young man's cheek. He lifted a hand as though to ward sound from the very walls that closed them in.

"Franklin Pierce, president of the United States of America!"

"Sis Perkins" has the prettiest story ever told and the plot of the play is so easily understood. It's not one of those silly things that no one can understand and after it's out you find yourself asking what it was all about. Sis Perkins tells a story of honesty, virtue, love and friendship. There are moments when you want to cry and so do; then again there are funny scenes when you laugh until you ache. It's not a blood and thunder play. It's devoid of horse play and dime novel heroes. It's a good, clean comedy, up to date for ladies, gentlemen and children. One night only at the Opera House, Wednesday August 10.

SHINGLE MILL IS DESTROYED

By Destructive Fire Early Tuesday Morning.

WAS LOCATED AT SOUTH CHARLEVOIX

One of the Old Manufacturing Industries of City.

Cause is Unknown, Probably Tramps. Loss is About Four Thousand. Insurance Two Thousand Dollars.

Monday was not only circus day but at night, or shortly after midnight, fire broke out in the See & Wardrop shingle mill at South Charlevoix. The cause is unknown but probably was caused by tramps, as the mill was closed and the windows boarded up.

The firemen responded quickly, although it was a long run, but were nuable to save much, notwithstanding they worked hard all night through a drizzling rain.

The loss on the mill will be abont $3,500 and on the lumber is estimated at $500. Insurance of $2,000 was carried on the mill and none on the lumber. The mill was an old landmark of Charlevoix, having been operated by different firms for several years, and it is doubtful whether it will be rebuilt.

While the property loss is not great, in comparison with the fire losses of our sister cities, it brings into emphasis Charlevoix's remarkable ireeness from destructive fires, and the fact that with such a competent volnnteer fire department, additional facilities shonld be provided for their nse.

CIRCUS WAS GOOD ONE

Sun Brothers Pleased Mamoth Crowd Monday Afternoon and Evening.

Charlevoix received the annual visit of the popular Sun Brothers' big tented exhibitions last Monday. The circns however arrived in town early Sunday morning, over the Pere Marquette Railrond, coming from Traverse City. It was indeed a clean looking agregation from a to z. The horses and ponies are sleek looking and appear as if they hnve missed very few meals during their summer's travels.

The conduct and general behavior of the workingmen and attaches was of the best, there was a noticeable absence of swearing or any bombastic methods. Early on Monday morning, large crowds began to assemble in town to take in the attendant sights of the circus. Both afternoon and night, the show had gratifying audiences. Everybody was highly pleased with the long line of nttractions and features offered. The trick ponies, the trained elephants and the ferocious man eating lions in daring "stnnts", were the predominant animal acts and they were received in a favorable manner. The high tight wire actors and the acrobats were as fine as any ever before seen in Charlevoix. The clowns were very funny and kept the audiences in a constant scream of laughter. In fact the whole show was one of the very finest one ring circuses that ever encamped in the cnnfines of this town.

This is the 19th year of the Sun Show on the road, and their entertainments seem to annually get better and better.

Good order prevailed all day long. No fakes were in evidence, everything being clean, refined and attractive. From here the circus journeyed to Bellaire, leaving over the P. M. Ry. shortly after the midnight hour.

MAPLE GROVE GRANGERS

Will Hold Third Annual Picnic August 27

Hon. D. E McClure of Muskegon Will Deliver Address.

Maple Grove grangers are making preparations for their third annual picnic August 27. A mammoth crowd always is present at Maple Grove's picnics, as a good time is always assured from morning until midnight.

This year in addition to the field day sports and dance in the evening, Hon. D. E. McClure of Muskegon will deliver an address. Mr. McClure was speaker at the Pomona meeting at Maple Grove last year, and their asking for his return this year is proof that they were well pleased with his address. If you have never heard Mr. McClure take a day off the 27 and we can gnarantee you not only a day nf pleasure but an address by one of the best public speakers in Michigan.

F. D. Scott's Platform

FRANK D. SCOTT, senatorial candidate for the Republican nomination in the 29th Senatorial District, in reply to inquiries as to how he stood on various public questions, in an interview with The Alpena Evening News, stated his platform as follows:

"I believe in the selection of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, and if nominated and elected as State Senator, I will cast my vote in the legislature, for the candidate for the United States Senate, who has received the highest test vote in the primaries.

"That all revenue derived by the state from automobile licences, liveries, transient vendors, peddlers, etc., should go into a "good roads" fund and be divided proportionately in each county for the purpose of improving our public highways.

"That our forests and timber lands should be protected in every way possible.

"That our state lands should be homesteaded or sold for agricultural purposes where possible and not sold to companies and speculators who hold the same as security show, for persons doing business with them.

"That the several departments of the state should be conducted in an economical and business-like manner.

"The retention of existing local self-government laws.

"The equitable distribution of primary school funds.

"And I also believe that Senators and Legislators should keep their constituents informed of their doings during the legislative session, through the newspapers, instead of selecting a few items for publication every two years, just before election."

The foregoing statement by Mr. Scott, regarding his position on the subjects mentioned, will dispose of certain false rumors relative to Mr. Scott's position on important public matters. 32-t-1

CANDIDATE FOR SPEAKER

Representative Baker of Cheboygan In the Race

As Speaker His First Concern Would Be the Public Interest.

It will be some time before the speaker must be chosen for the next Michigan house of representatives. But it isn't too early for the voters interested—and they should all be concerned—to let it be known what kind of a man they believe ought to be chosen for that place.

We believe if our readers will read the records of Speaker Campbell of the last house they will not want such a man to be speaker again. He is a candidate for re-election. He was too friendly to the "interests" that had axes to grind at Lansing and seemed too much on the autocratic order, especially when bending the house rules would help him to carry his point.

Representative H. F. Baker, of Cheboygan Co., is in the field for the speakership. Of all the men who have been mentioned for the place he seems to us to be the best adapted for the place by training, by experience, by ability and by his disposition to follow the square deal policy in his legislative career. He is a broad minded man, of sincere and deep convictions, and yet tolerant toward those who differ from him in their views of legislative matters. But he is from Missouri when it comes to any proposition that does not bear evidence on its face of a square deal and a fair purpose. In the many clashes that came up in the last legislature when the speaker took the side that was opposed to the public interest, Representative Baker was his strongest and most persistent opponent on the floor of the house, and in several hard fought struggles brought him to time.

As speaker, Representative Baker's first concern would be the public interest. He ought to win the place, and we hope he may.—Hastings Banner.

RESIGNS UNDER CHARGES

Chief of Police of Boyne City Leaves the Country.

Was Labor Party's Choice for Sheriff at the Coming Election.

During the past week a topic of conversation has been the predicament of R. W. Beach of Boyne City, who was the chief leader in the movement for a Labor party ticket, in this county, and was slated to receive the nomination for sheriff.

Week before last Mr. Beach who was Chief of Police of Boyne City, secured the arrest of Lewis Unrath on a charge of violating the local option law. Unrath was lodged in jail in this city. The first of the week Mrs. Unrath charged that Beach attempted criminal assault and, on the matter being investigated by Mayor McCnistion and a committee of aldermen, Beach made damaging admissions, whereupon his resignation was demanded. Tuesday a warrant was sworn out for his arrest but it was found he had left the city and his whereabonts were unknown to anyone.

Considerable sympathy is expressed for Beach in his downfall as he was one of the best known men in the county. It is claimed that he was excited when under investigation and can prove his innocence of the charges if brought to trial, which we certainly hope will be the case.

ALFALFA GROWING

Gnvernor Warner Enthusiastic Over Possibilities

Wishes State Board of Agriculture to Conduct Experiments.

Governor Warner is enthusiastic over alfalfa raising by Michigan farmers. The governor states it is his purpose to urge upon the State Board of Agriculture the advisability of taking steps to get Michigan farmers interested in growing alfalfa as a fodder crop. Governor Warner says, "Though the great utility and value of alfalfa have been clearly demonstrated in other states, Michigan has been slow to realize its importance and the farmers still give up their acreage largely to the less valuable fodder crops."

"I think that the Board of Agriculture should furnish the farmers in every county an object lesson of the value of alfalfa. My plan is to have the board superintend the sowing of say 100 tracts of alfalfa which would give each county at least one experimental crop. In each county one farmer should be singled out and asked to devote five or ten acres to this crop. Soil analysis would determine where the seed could be planted, and the state's experts would see that the crop was perfectly started. The results, I am confident, would be excellent, and the growing of alfalfa would receive a great impetus.

"Alfalfa is the pre-eminent crop. It yields beautifully compared with hay, and as its roots run deep in the ground it flourishes in periods of drought in which hay is practically burned out. If alfalfa was generally planted in the upper peninsula, for instance, you would not hear apprehension about the shortage of fodder expressed on every hand as you do now. The experiments I have in mind would cost maybe $2,000 or $3,000, but they would be of incalculable value to the state.

DIES SUDDENLY

Miss Esther Moncrief While Bathing Saturday.

Was Attending House Party at the Belvedere Resort. Home in Arkansas.

Miss Esther Moncriel, aged sixteen, of Prescott, Arkansas, who was visiting W. M. Bemis at a house party, at the Belvedere resort, died suddenly of heart failure, brought on by acute indigestion, while bathing in Pine Lake Saturday afternoon. Miss Moncrief's companions heard her scream and stiffen out. The life savers were called and worked over her for almost three hours.

The life buoy was tied in such a way that it was not available in time, the second case of the kind the past year.

Miss Moncrief's father died last year from the same ailment. Her mother was notified and the body taken home Sunday.

This is the second fatal accident in Pine Lake this season, and a man should be stationed there for the protection of bathers.

AUTOMOBILE ROUTES

Work Undertaken by Michigan State Automobile Association.

A communication has been received in Saginaw from the Michigan State Automobile association, with headquarters in Grand Rapids, stating that sign boards will be erected along the principal routes in Michigan. Two men and an automobile truck will be engaged in this work, starting Tuesday, August 4th, and the task will cover a period of about six weeks. The routes to be marked are Grand Rapids to Detroit, Grand Rapids to Holland, Grand Rapids to Kalamazoo, Detroit to Saginaw, via Flint and Pontiac, and Detroit to South Bend, Ind., via Kalamazoo. The signs are of wood, painted with a special paint to withstand the elements. They will be erected on a ten foot angle iron posts set in three feet of concrete. The total number of signs to be erected is 834 and in addition there will be special signs placed at various points indicating dangerous turns of the road and railroad crossings. The total expenditures for the work will be $2,800.

The importance of this work lies in the fact that a stranger can travel any of these routes and by keeping straight ahead until he reaches a sign which tells him how to turn, cannot lose the road. Automobilists may go to Detroit, Saginaw, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Chicago, or any intermediate points without losing track of the roads. The work of establishing these routes was enormous as all routes were driven and the exact mileage taken so every sign gives the exact mileage to any point. All figures were finally checked up and the accuracy proved.

To-morrow, Thursday, August 11 is Circus Day at Boy City, something which no one can afford to miss, as no where else in the world is a stunt of this kind pulled off. This is the second time Boy City circus has been here. Last year's circus was a world beater and the mammoth crowd present enjoyed themselves thoroughly, it being a day of freaks, frolic and fakes. In addition to the attractions of last year, several new stunts are ready to be pulled off. The baby white elephant, the rhyng tailed whangdoodle and several more rare and curious animals will be exhibited.

The afternoon performance will begin at 2:30 and the evening performance at 8:00 o'clock. Half hour services will be given and the Beaver will leave Wilbur's dock at 7:30 p. m. returning after the performance. Fare round trip 15 cents. No admission will be charged to the grounds.

In addition to the circus an interesting exhibition will be given. Everybody has seen moving pictures but few have seen how they are made. Selig Bros., the leading manufacturers of moving pictures in the world, will be present and will take moving pictures of Boy City, its visitors and circus.

IS WAGNER DISSATISFIED?

Great Player's Indifference Said to Be Cause of Pirates' Slump.

According to the wise ones, Hans Wagner, once worshiped by all fandom as its foremost idol, is dissatisfied with his berth as a member of the Pirates and has created dissensions in the ranks of the team. The miserable showing of the champions is charged to this cause. A Pittsburg critic's version of Wagner's indifference is as follows:

"Although Wagner draws a salary of $10,000 a year and as a player under contract is supposed to play as directed by the manager of the team, it is no secret that time and again Honus has disobeyed instructions and has been performing in a don't care and listless fashion.

"In a recent game with the Phillies Wagner went into Fred Clarke's territory and caught a ball which Clarke had called out he would take. A painful collision with disastrous results was averted only by Clarke's agility in turning aside in the nick of time. Wagner's utter disregard of discipline has disgusted George Gibson and other leading members of the team and affected their work. The pitchers lose heart when easy taps which any high league shortstop ought to handle go through Wagner's territory and are recorded as hits.

"Honus has expressed himself as being tired of the national game. Being independently wealthy, he does not relish taking orders and is quoted as saying: 'I would like to play baseball just when I feel like it, instead of being compelled to report at a certain time every day and be required to do things as some one else dictates. A ball player is nothing more than a well fed slave, who may be sold to a club a long way from home any day. When a fellow gets past the stage of enthusiasm baseball becomes labor for him.'"

Davis Lawn Tennis Matches.

Affairs surrounding the Davis International lawn tennis challenge cup have taken a new turn. From the official American tennis organ the statement is made that it has been decided to nominate the team of players to represent this country at the time of playing the all comers' national championship on the courts at Newport, R. I., which will begin Aug. 15. That was the procedure last year. At that time it will be possible to obtain players willing to journey to Australia. Already it is known that Beals C. Wright, now competing in England, and the two Californians, Maurice E. McLoughlin and Melville T. Long, are willing to go. However, much depends upon the form that the two latter display when they appear in the eastern tournaments this season.

Chase Playing Sensational Game.

Hal Chase of the New York Americans is playing marvelous ball for the Yankees. Stallings' infielders do not have to look where they are throwing, for Chase is grabbing the ball wherever it is within five feet of him.

Block, the Chicago American catcher, is sure death to base stealing. He has a special whip and adds a deal of strength to the backstopping.

CLOSE RACES IN BOTH LEAGUES

Last Year's Winners Are Not Likely to Repeat.

ATHLETICS HAVE GOOD CHANCE

Connie Mack's Team Picked by Many to Capture Gonfalon In American. Chicago Appears Strongest In National League.

With the major league baseball season half over it begins to look very much as if neither winner of last year will repeat. It is too early to make any predictions, for there is ample time for a general shifting of the positions held by the teams in the National and American leagues before Oct. 15, but on the form shown so far by Detroit and Pittsburg it looks as though some other club would fly the banner in each league this year.

Hughey Jennings has not given up hope of landing his fourth pennant for Detroit, and as the Tigers have had a reputation of making a strong finish ever since Jennings took charge of them this team must not be counted out of all chances for the championship. The Detroit team of 1910 does not look like the team that has won the pennant three times in succession. The Tigers started and made up a lot of ground lost in the first two or three weeks of the season, but they have fallen back again, and it will take an unusual reversal of form to bring them to the fore.

Detroit does not play with the dash and spirit which characterized its work last year and the year previous. Jennings works just as hard and still has all the old fire and spirit, but his team lacks the speed on the bases, the terrific slugging and that spirit of confidence which made the Tigers a team to be feared at any stage of the game, no matter how far behind they were in the score.

Unless Detroit takes a brace very soon the team will be so far down in the race that it will be impossible for it to regain the lead with such teams as the Athletics, New York and Boston ahead of it and all going at a winning clip.

From present indications it looks as if there was an excellent chance of the American league race being won by an eastern team. The Athletics are running a race that will be hard to beat, but New York is sticking pretty close, and the Bostonians are playing in great form. With these three teams in such grand shape Detroit does not look to have a chance at present, but Jennings' crew have been further back than they are now and won out. They still have a chance to repeat unless the other three clubs continue their winning career.

Of the Athletics, New York and Boston, the former appears the strongest, and if Mack's pitchers hold out and no accidents occur to weaken the infield the Athletics have a splendid chance to capture their third championship pennant.

The American league race looks like a close contest to the finish, and the team with the staying qualities will win out.

The National league race is almost as big a problem to solve as the American. Chicago looks to have the best chance at present, but New York is making a great fight, and the Pirates have at last shown something of their last season's form. The Giants have been playing in mad out ball, however, and with a pitching staff that cannot be relied upon outside of Mathewson, McGraw's club appears to have a contract on its hands that it can hardly fill.

By bolstering up his pitching staff Frank Chance put the Cubs in the running again, and the team's hitting strength and ability to play inside baseball make it a strong choice for the pennant. Weakness in the box has practically kept the Pirates out of the race so far this season, but with a half season to go the Pirates may make a strong finish, and if the pitchers retain their form Chance and New York will have to keep hustling to bar the Pirates out of first place.

New York's weakness so far has been against second division teams. Boston and Brooklyn throwing several hits to Giants' pitchers.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS BY MAYNARD G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.

The Seven Wives.

Hardly had the words fallen from the lips of Obadiah Price than the old man straightened himself and stood as rigid as a gargoyle, his gaze penetrating into the darkness of the room beyond Captain Plum, his head inclined slightly, every nerve in him strained to a tension of expectancy. His companion involuntarily gripped the butt of his pistol and faced the narrow entrance through which they had come. In the moment of absolute silence that followed there came to him, faintly, a sound, unintelligible at first, but growing in volume until he knew that it was the last echo of a tolling bell. There was no movement, no sound of breath or whisper from the old man at his back. But when it came again, floating to him as if from a vast distance, he turned quickly to find Obadiah Price with his face lifted, his thin arms flung wide above his head and his lips moving as if in prayer. His eyes burned with a dull glow as though he had been suddenly thrown into a trance. He seemed not to breathe, no vibration of life stirred him except in the movement of his lips. With the third toll of the distant bell he spoke, and to Captain Plum it was as if the passion and fire in his voice came from another being.

"Our Christ, Master of hosts, we call upon thy chosen people the three blessings of the universe—peace, prosperity and plenty, and upon Straag, priest, king and prophet, the bounty of thy power!"

Three times more the distant bell tolled forth its mysterious message and when the last echoes had died away the old man's arms dropped beside him and he turned again to Captain Plum.

"Franklin Pierce, president of the United States of America," he repeated, as though there had been no interruption since his companion's question. "The package is to be delivered to him. Now you must excuse me. An important matter calls me out for a short time. But I will be back soon—oh, yes, very soon. And you will wait for me. You will wait for me here, and then I will take you to St. James."

He was gone in a quick hopping way, like a cricket, and the last that Captain Plum saw of him was his ghostly face turned back for an instant in the darkness of the next room, and after that the soft patter of his feet and the strange chuckle in his throat traveled to the outer door and died away as he passed out into the night. Nathaniel Plum was not a man to be easily startled, but there was something so unusual about the proceedings in which he was as yet playing a blind part that he forgot to smoke, which was saying much. Who was the old man? Was he mad? His eyes scanned the little room and an exclamation of astonishment fell from his lips when he saw the leather bag, partly filled with gold, lying where his mysterious acquaintance had dropped it. Surely this was madness or else another ruse to test his honesty. The discovery thrilled him. It was wonderfully quiet out in that next room and very dark. Were hidden eyes guarding that bag? Well, if so, he would give their owner to understand that he was not a thief. He rose from his chair and moved toward the bag, lifted it in his hand, and tossed it back again so that the gold in it chinked loudly. Then he went to the narrow aperture—and blocked it with his body and listened until he knew that if there had been human life in the room he would have heard it.

The outer door was opened and through it there came to him the soft breath of the night air and the sweetness of balsam and wild flowers. It struck him that it would be pleasanter waiting outside than in, and it would undoubtedly make no difference to Obadiah Price. In front of the cabin he found the stump of a log and seating himself on it where the clear light of the stars fell full upon him he once more began his interrupted smoke. It seemed to him that he had waited a long time when he heard the sound of footsteps. They came rapidly as if the person was half running. Hardly had he located the direction of the sound when a figure appeared in the opening and hurried toward the door of the cabin. A dozen yards from him it paused for a moment and turned partly about, as if inspecting the path over which it had come. With a greeting whistle Captain Plum jumped to his feet. He heard a little throat note, which was not the chuckling of Obadiah Price, and the figure ran almost into his arms. A sudden knowledge of having made a mistake drew Captain Plum a pace backward. For scarcely more than five seconds he found himself staring into the white terrified face of a girl. Eyes wide and glowing with sudden fright met his own. Instinctively he lifted his hand to his hat, but before he could speak the girl sprang back with a low cry and ran swiftly down the path that led into the gloom of the woods.

For several minutes Captain Plum stood as if the sudden apparition had petrified him. He listened long after the sound of retreating footsteps had died away. There remained behind a faint sweet odor of lilac which stirred his soul and set his blood fighting. It was a beautiful face that he had seen. He was sure of that and yet he could have given no good verbal proof of it. Only the eyes and the odor of lilac remained with him and after a little the lilac drifted away. Then he went back to the log and sat down. He smiled as he thought of the joke that he had unwittingly played on Obadiah. From his knowledge of the Beaver Island Mormons he was satisfied that the old man who displayed gold in such reckless profusion was anything but a bachelor. In all probability this was one of his wives and the cabin behind him, he concluded, was for some reason isolated from the harem. "Evidently that little actress is not a flirt," he concluded, "or she would have given me time to speak to her."

The continued absence of Obadiah Price began to fill Captain Plum with impatience. After an hour's wait he reentered the cabin and made his way to the little room, where the candle was still burning dimly. To his astonishment he beheld the old man sitting beside the table. His thin face was propped between his hands and his eyes were closed as if he was asleep. They shot open instantly on Captain Plum's appearance.

"I've been waiting for you, Nat," he cried, straightening himself with spring-like quickness. "Waiting for you a long time, Nat!" He rubbed his hands and chuckled at his own familiarity. "I saw you out there enjoying yourself. What did you think of her, Nat?" He winked with such audacious glee that, despite his own astonishment, Captain Plum burst into a laugh. Obadiah Price held up a warning hand. "Tut, tut, not so loud!" he admonished. His face was a man of wrinkles. His little black eyes shone with silent laughter. There was no doubt but that he was immensely pleased over something. "Tell me, Nat—why did you come to St. James?"

He leaned forward over the table, his odd white head almost resting on it, and twiddled his thumbs with wonderful rapidity. "Eh, Nat?" he urged. "Why did you come?"

"Because it was too hot and uninteresting lying out there in a calm, dad," replied the master of the Typhoon. "We've been roasting for 36 hours without a breath to fill our sails. I came over to see what you people are like. Any harm done?"

"Not a bit, not a bit—yet," chuckled the old man. "And what's your business, Nat?"

"Sailing—mostly."

"Ho, ho, ho! of course, I might have known it! Sailing—mostly. Why, certainly you sail! And why do you carry a pistol on one side of you and a knife on the other, Nat?"

"Troublous times, Dad. Some of the fisherfolk along the Northern End aren't very scrupulous. They took a cargo of canned stuffs from me a year back."

"And what use do you make of the four-pounder that's wrapped up in tarpaulin under your deck, Nat? And what in the world are you going to do with five barrels of gunpowder?"

"How in blazes—" began Captain Plum.

"O, to be sure, to be sure—they're for the fisher-folk," interrupted Obadiah Price. "Blow 'em up, eh, Nat? And you seem to be a young man of education, Nat. How did you happen to make a mistake in your count? Haven't you 12 men aboard your sloop instead of eight, Nat? Aren't there 12 instead of eight? Eh, Nat?"

"The devil take you!" cried Captain Plum, leaping suddenly to his feet, his face flaming red. "Yes, I have got 12 men and I've got a gun in tarpaulin and I've got five barrels of gunpowder! But how in the name of kingdom-come did you find it out?"

Obadiah Price came around the end of the table and stood so close to Captain Plum that a person ten feet away could not have heard him when he spoke.

"I know more than that, Nat," he whispered. "Listen! A little while ago—say two weeks back—you were becalmed off the head of Beaver Island, and one dark night you were boarded by two boat-loads of men who made you and your crew prisoners, robbed you of everything you had—and the next day you went back to Chicago. Eh?"

Nathaniel stood speechless.

"And you made up your mind the pirates were Mormons, enlisted some of your friends, armed your ship—and you're back here to make us settle. Isn't it so, Nat?"

The little old man was rubbing his hands eagerly, excitedly.

"You tried to get the revenue cutter Michigan to come down with you, but they wouldn't—ho, ho, they wouldn't! One of our friends in Chicago sent quick word ahead of you to tell me all about it, and—Straag, the king, doesn't know!"

He spoke the last words in intense earnestness.

Then, suddenly, he held out his hand.

"Young man, will you shake hands with me? Will you shake hands?—and then we will go to St. James!"

Captain Plum thrust out a hand and the old man gripped it. The thin fingers tightened like cold clamps of steel. For a moment the face of Obadiah Price underwent a strange change. The hardness and glitter went out of his eyes and in place there came a questioning, almost an appealing, look. His tense mouth relaxed. It was as if he was on the point of surrendering to some emotion which he was struggling to stifle. And Nathaniel, meeting those eyes, felt that somewhere within him had been struck a strange chord of sympathy, something that made this little old man more than a half-mad stranger to him, and involuntarily the grip of his fingers tightened around those of his companion.

"Now we will go to St. James, Captain Plum!"

He attempted to withdraw his hand but Captain Plum held to it.

"Not yet!" he exclaimed. "There are two or three things which your friend didn't tell you, Obadiah Price!"

Nathaniel's eyes glittered dangerously.

"When I left ship this morning I gave explicit orders to Casey, my mate."

He gazed steadily into the old man's unflinching eyes.

"I said something like this: 'Casey, I'm going to see Straag before I come back. If he's willing to settle for five thousand, we'll call it off. And if he isn't—why, we'll stand out there a mile and blow St. James into hell! And if I don't come back by to-morrow at sundown, Casey, you take command and blow it to hell without me!' So, Obadiah Price, if there's treachery—"

The old man clutched at his hands with insane fierceness.

"There will be no treachery, Nat, I swear to God there will be no treachery! Come, we will go—"

Still Captain Plum hesitated.

"Who are you? Whom am I to follow?"

"A member of our holy Council of Twelve, Nat, and lord high treasurer of his majesty, King Straag!"

Before Captain Plum could recover from the surprise of this whispered announcement the little old man had freed himself and was pattering awfully through the darkness of the next room. The master of the Typhoon followed close behind him. Outside the councilor hesitated for a moment, as if debating which route to take, and then with a prodigious wink at Captain Plum and a throatful of his inimitable chuckles, chose the path down which his startled visitor of a short time before had fled. For 15 minutes this path led between thick black walls of forest verdure. Obadiah Price kept always a few paces ahead of his companion and spoke not a word. At the end of perhaps half a mile the path entered into a large clearing on the farther side of which Nathaniel caught the glimmer of a light. They passed close to this light, which came from the window of a large square house built of logs, and Captain Plum became suddenly conscious that the air was filled with the redolent perfume of lilac. With half a dozen quick strides he overtook the councilor and caught him by the arm.

"I smell lilac!" he exclaimed.

"Certainly, so do I," replied Obadiah Price. "We have very fine lilacs on the island."

"And I smelled lilac back there," continued Nathaniel, still holding to the old man's arm, and pointing a thumb over his shoulder. "I smelled 'em back there, when—"

"Ho, ho, ho!" chuckled the councilor softly. "I don't doubt it, Nat, I don't doubt it. She is very fond of lilacs. She wears the flowers very often."

He pulled himself away and Captain Plum could hear his queer chuckling for some time after. Soon they entered the gloom of the woods again and a little later came out into another clearing and Nathaniel knew that it was St. James that lay at his feet. The lights of a few fishing boats were twinkling in the harbor, but for the most part the town was dark. Here and there a window shone like a spot of phosphorescent yellow in the dismal gloom and the great beacon still burned steadily over the home of the prophet.

"Ah, it is not time," whispered Obadiah. "It is still too early." He drew his companion out of the path which they had followed and sat himself down on a hummock a dozen yards away from it, inviting Nathaniel by a pull of the sleeve to do the same. There were three of these hummocks, side by side, and Captain Plum chose the one nearest the old man and waited, for him to speak. But the councilor did not open his lips. Doubled over until his chin rested almost upon the sharp points of his knees, he gazed steadily at the beacon, and as he looked it shuddered and grew dark, like a firefly that suddenly closes its wings. With a quick spring the councilor straightened himself and turned to the master of the Typhoon.

"You have a good nose, Nat," he said, "but your ears are not so good. Sh-h-h-h!" He lifted a hand warningly and nodded sidewise toward the path. Captain Plum listened. He heard low voices and then footsteps—voices that were approaching rapidly, and were those of women, and footsteps that were almost running. The old man caught him by the arm and as the sounds came nearer his grip tightened.

"Don't frighten them, Nat. Get down!"

He crouched until he was only a part of the shadows of the ground and following his example Nathaniel slipped between two of the knolls. A

Official Call

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The State Convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Wayne Pavilion in the city of Detroit on Thursday, the sixth day of October, 1910, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon for the purpose of nominating candidates for State offices, for the election of a Republican State Central Committee, and a Chairman thereof, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the Convention.

Pursuant to law, Wednesday, the 14th. day of September, 1910, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the County Convention of the Republican Party for the election of delegates to the Republican State Convention herein called, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

Under the resolution of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the State Convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.

GERRIT J. DIKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.

Grand Rapids, July 26th, 1910.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to ten delegates.

In commenting upon a squib from the Marquette Mining Journal the St. Johns News, the independent paper of Clinton county edited by Lew F. Critchson quotes the article from the Journal and says: The Marquette Journal, the leading Republican paper of the upper peninsula, furnishes this: "The rank and file will see more of our venerable friend, Senator Burrows, in the few weeks of the present primary campaign than they saw of him throughout all the rest of his senatorial career. On his occasional visits to Michigan in the past aforesaid rank and file has rarely gotten nearer to him than enable it to catch a distant view of his top hat. His blossoming regard for Mr. Humble Voter is one of the most touching developments of the primary campaign."

This is what The St. Johns News has contended all along—that J. C. Burrows never knows the common people except when he wants re-election. Then he will grasp your hand, put his hand on your shoulder, emit the smile he has in smile-storage-battery for such occasions, and become the most confidential man you ever saw; but as soon as he gets what he's after it's all off until the next time he is after some political office. It looks very much as though he would not work this short-change racket this year—and it is hoped for the stanching of the State and Burrows connection with Aldrich and other trust attorneys, that he will not.

Charlevoix Local Social meets every alternate Monday at Tugmen's hall, foot of Bridge street. Everyone welcome.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Last Friday afternoon the W. C. T. U. met at the home of one of its members, Mrs. E. A. Reed. This proved to be one more of our pleasant gatherings. It was quite a distance to go, but a goodly number got there just the same. Mr. Reed took several in his rig, and over a dozen took advantage of the hay ride from B. P. Wilkinson's, out and back. A goodly number of the neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Reed were present and still others were disappointed in not being there for one reason or another. But we feel confident that as many as were there were glad to be there.

The program was not all given, as some who were to take part were not present, but enough was given to make good. A rising vote of thanks was given Mr. Wilkinson for the hay ride. Not far from forty persons were present and enjoyed the fine picnic supper. The luscious red raspberries and delicious ice cream provided by our host and hostess as their treat was the capsheaf of the good things the table was provided with, and was duly appreciated, and as the hay-riders were about to depart three hearty cheers were given Mr. and Mrs. Reed. We are sure all would be glad to go again.

One thing was spoken of as being much liked, the glass of marmalade which during the season of scarcity of fruit some wished to know how it was made, for such we gladly give the recipe, as follows: Three pounds each of sugar and pie-plant, grated peel of two oranges and the pulp of four and one pound of raisins cut coarse. Boil 20 minutes.

The possibility of securing Mrs. E. L. Calkins, our state W. C. T. U. president for an address in the near future was hinted at, as she expects to be at Bay View soon. If we are able to secure her, we feel sure that all who can do so should hear her, that they will feel repaid for any effort put forth to do so. A former address by her here was said by some to be the finest temperance talk they had ever heard.

Spoiled Her Day.

In the days when executions were still carried out in public a servant girl upon one occasion begged her mistress to allow her a day out for a purpose which she did not divulge. The lady of the house gave the required permission, and the girl accordingly went off for the day, but returned in the evening weeping copiously.

"Why, Mary," asked her kindly mistress, greatly perturbed at the poor girl's evident distress, "what on earth is your trouble? Tell me, and perhaps I can help you."

"Oh, ma'am," blubbered Mary, "I went to see the man hanged at Salisbury, b-b-but he's been reprieved!"—London Answers.

Fishing With Cormorants.

On the banks of the river Ya we saw many Chinese cormorant fishers with their birds, which are very tame and intelligent. When fishing a piece of grass is first tied round their throats to prevent them from swallowing the fish, and they are afterward turned into the water. The small fish they can easily manage to bring back to the boat, but when they find a large specimen it sometimes needs the co-operation of two or three of the birds to land it safely on their master's boat. In this river the fishermen often catch the great salamander, a huge newt or water lizard, which sometimes reaches a length of ten to twelve feet and whose flesh is much appreciated by the Chinese.—While World Magazine.

Champion Being Swamped With Challenges From Unknowns.

WILL HE MEET LANGFORD?

Critics Believe Boston Negro Is Only One Who Has Chance to Beat Title Holder—Two College Athletes After Colored Man.

By TOMMY CLARK.

As was to be expected, new pugilistic phenomenons are popping up all over the country and hurling challenges at Jack Johnson right and left since he defeated Jeff. Some of them have done but little boxing, but figure that owing to their great strength and build they would be a match for the colored man. Of course no one who knows anything about boxing will consider for one minute that Johnson will pay any heed to the challenges of these fellows.

Two college athletes, one from the University of Michigan, the other of Harvard, are among the white men who have hopes of winning back the heavyweight boxing title for the white race.

These men are Albert Benbrook of the Michigan college and Earl Van Meter Long, who has been a student at the Cambridge seat of learning for two years.

Among the bunch of ambitious men who are willing to risk their future health in a battle with Johnson are Frank Smith, the Chicago White Sox pitcher, and Larry McLean, the Cincinnati catcher. These men are on record as being willing to fight the champion. They are fine athletes and somewhat huggy on the boxing game. Playing baseball is one branch of sport.

SAM LANGFORD, WHO IS HOTFOOT AFTER BATTLE WITH JOHNSON.

fighting another, and these two fellows had better stick to their chosen profession.

Looking over the long list of men who desire to oppose Johnson in the ring, he finds that there are only two who stand any chance of getting on a match with the champion, and they are Sam Langford and Al Kaufman. There are many experts who believe that the former would stand an excellent chance of defeating Johnson should the pair ever meet. In fact, he is the only man at this moment who is fitted physically and scientifically to meet the champion in a twenty-four foot ring. Langford is conceded to be the most formidable hitter and quickest finisher known to the ring since Robert Fitzsimmons' freckled mauleys became so brittle he was afraid to take a punch at even an inflated bag.

Although Langford would concede forty pounds in weight and almost five inches in height, which would seem to be an insurmountable handicap, yet he is willing to go into the ring with the big Galveston fighter. As Johnson also would have a great advantage in reach and Langford is not proof against a left hand jab, it can be seen that the smaller man would be likely to receive a terrific punching before he would be able to get to close quarters and turn loose his own Queensberry artillery. But Samuel is confident that if he ever got close enough to land one of his catapultic punches on Johnson the title would change hands in a hurry.

Kaufman's chances of defeating Johnson are very slim. At the training camp Johnson just played with Al. In fact, he could put Kaufman away any time he chose to. As far as Benbrook, Long, McLean and Smith are concerned, they have very little chance, if any, of getting a match or of beating Johnson if they do. If Langford cannot turn the trick Johnson will remain champion for many years to come.

ANOTHER BIG SHOW

With a big aggregation of daring cowboys, cowgirls, Indians, bronco busters, rough riders and other sensational exponents of the "wild and woolly" west young Buffalo's Wild West and Texas Rangers will exhibit in East Jordan Saturday, August 13 and in Petoskey Monday, August 15. The exhibitions will begin at 2 p. m. and 8 o'clock in the evening.

The show will portray by a rapid fire succession of thrilling events life on the frontier in the days when the pioneers of early American history blazed the way through blood and fire and wrested the rolling prairies from savage outlaws.

There are said to be 300 performers and attaches with the show and more than 150 head of horses, broncos, ponies, burros, wild steers and oxen, in addition to the handsome draught horses which will draw the historic Deadwood stage coach and old-time prairie schooners through the streets in the parade, which it is announced, will start at the show grounds at 10 o'clock on the day of the exhibition.

The announcement is made by advance representative of the show that the exhibition will take place afternoon and evening, "rain or shine."

The performances will be given in a huge side wall and canopy tent, as big as two city blocks. The program, it is said, will be replete with thrilling exhibitions of dare devil feats in the saddle, the subjugation of vicious broncbos or "man eating" outlaw ponies which will fight at the drop of a hat as Major Rhodes, general manager of the show puts it; a stage coach held up, Indian fights, dances and massacres, sharp shooting with a cowgirl as a near-target to add a touch of excitement, the riding of untamable steers a sensational wrestling match with a savage Texas steer and a score more of events which the show management promises will abound with thrills and spills. In addition there are two side shows filled with strange freaks of nature.

England's Roman Amphitheater.

Dorchester possesses the best preserved Roman amphitheater in England, in which over 10,000 people gathered in 1705 to witness the burning of a woman who had murdered her husband. Dorchester was a place of importance as early as the Roman occupation, and at a later date it had an unenviable association with Judge Jeffreys and his bloody assize.

The Eskimo Baby.

The clothing of the Eskimo baby is often very scanty. In fact, one occasionally sees a baby being carried in its mother's hood with only a cotton shirt on, despite the fact that the thermometer registers 20 degrees below zero. The mother's hood is the baby's cradle. Being made of seal or deer skin, it is warm and wind proof. The infant also has the benefit of the heat of its mother's body and is out of harm's way. If it were laid in a basket cradle in the tent it would be very much in the way and would always be in danger of falling a prey to the wolfish Eskimo dogs that prowl round the door by day and night, ever ready to pick up a dainty morsel.—Wide World Magazine.

MILAN IN GOOD FORM.

Senators' Outgardener Playing a Consistently Good All Around Game.

Washington fans are highly pleased with the grand all round playing of Clyde Milan, the Senators' star center outfielder this season. Last year he fell off woefully in his batting and base running, and in many quarters it was common gossip that he was slated for release at the end of the season. Owing to the change of managers Milan was kept on the payroll of the Washington club. But since the 1910 campaign started Milan has been gobbling up everything in the outer garden, batting like a streak and running the bases like a demon. Recently Milan made four hits in as many times at bat and scored two runs. Manager McAleer thinks that in another year he will be classed with the best outfielders in the country.

BURNS AND CUTS.

How to Treat Them With Simple Remedies at Home.

Not every one knows what to do if he is burned. Nor is it time to learn remedies when touched by fire. Every household should have some preparation for quick relief of burns and bad cuts. While any severe burn or cut should mean a doctor, much can be done to alleviate pain until he comes. An emergency shelf should contain a package of absorbent cotton, rolls of bandages, court plaster, surgical scissors, soft pieces of old linen, antiseptic washes, witch hazel, some good salve, a bottle of carbolic acid labeled poison, a cake of antiseptic soap, a hypodermic syringe, hot water bottle, turpentine, box of mustard plasters, limewater and linseed oil.

For burns a soothing application is equal parts of linseed oil and limewater. Soak strips of linen in this mixture and renew when necessary. A slight burn kept soaked with witch hazel will often cease to burn. If this is not at hand cover lightly with ordinary kitchen soap and dredge the wound with flour.

A bad bruise can be eased by applying turpentine. This is also excellent if one has run a nail into the flesh. In case of a deep cut wash it out well with warm soapy water and then with some antiseptic solution, such as a weak solution of carbolic acid, a half teaspoonful of the acid to a tumbler of water.

For a bad sprain put first under hot water, then under cold. Keep this up until the doctor arrives, or bandage the part in some of the clay preparations recommended to reduce swelling and pain.

If the clothes seem to have stuck to the wound, do not tear them off, but soften with warm olive oil the parts that adhere, having first cut away the clothing close to the wound with sharp scissors.

Hit In Head, Bats Good.

Catcher Street of the Washingtons was hit on the head by a ball in Detroit and has been batting good ever since McAleer was hit on the head by a fist in Detroit, and the Washingtons have been going at a fast clip ever since.

Rooting Does Not Always Help.

Hugh Jennings is not sure that rooting helps a ball team in the long run. The players become accustomed to the rooting on the home grounds and miss it on the road.

SWEDISH ROYAL LIFE HAS ITS DRAWBACKS

THE Duke of Westgotland, a younger brother of the king of Sweden, and his wife, who was Princess Ingeborg, eldest daughter of the king of Denmark, are believers in the simple life. Their two children, Princess Margaret, eleven years old, and Princess Martha, nine, are taught to do every kind of housework. They even have to wash their own clothes in a plebeian washtub.

SWEDISH PRINCESSES REAL HOUSEWIVES.

The tubs they wash their embla zoned handkerchiefs in must be scrubbed out and turned up in the sun to dry by the princesses' own fair hands, and the holes in their royal stockings they must darn themselves. They have to make their own beds in the morning, shake out the rugs, rinse out the hand basins, put the sponges out in the air to sweeten, after which they have time to sit down and make themselves little house jackets to do the rest of their housekeeping lessons in.

Princess Margaret is not particularly handsome, though she doubtless will be the bride of some handsome cavalier. Her sister Martha is a sweet, rather thin faced child with a "soul's awakening" look in her eyes, and she gets most of the sympathy

Smart young officers think her little hands should not be allowed to get rough with soap and water in the washtub, and there have been several more or less private protests. But the parents have always answered:

"My dear young man, when Martha is old enough to stop washing for fear of spoiling her hands she will be just old enough to be proud she knows how. Her husband she shall choose herself, as shall her sister, and we believe she will choose one that likes a woman who knows how to do everything in the house. Then she will have no trouble in getting things properly done for her."

BETTER LOOK BEFORE SIGNING

Russian an Object Lesson For Careless Public Officials.

City officials who sign documents without taking the trouble to read them gain a lesson from an experience which recently befell M. Veritelnikoff, governor of Kostroma, Russia. The event excited some surprise, as the governor was a thoroughpaced reactionary and noted for his zeal in crushing out any manifestations of progressive life in the government over which he ruled. No reason for his resignation could be adduced, and it remained a mystery for some time. But this is the secret:

M. Veritelnikoff was so occupied that he often signed documents brought to him by his subordinates without troubling to read them. Taking advantage of this, one of his enemies secured his signature to a letter which was dispatched to the ministry of the interior and caused such astonishment that a telegram was sent to Kostroma ordering the governor to come immediately to St. Petersburg.

When M. Veritelnikoff arrived, the letter was handed to him. To his utter surprise, it contained his resignation. He read with amazement such passages as "I am absolutely no use and incapable of ruling the government confided to me," followed by a confession of failure and the statement, "I have made a mass of blunders." But he could not dispute that the signature at the end of the letter was his.

He owned that he often signed papers without knowing their contents and had sufficient sense of humor to tender his resignation on the spot. Under the circumstances M. Stolypin could do nothing but advise the czar to accept it.

PARIS TO SPEND $200,000,000

Will Be Used For Boulevards and Public Buildings.

The municipality of Paris has been authorized to borrow the immense sum of nearly $200,000,000. Half of this will be used for the upkeep of municipal edifices and the erection of new buildings and for parks and promenades. The other half will be used for the creation of new boulevards and highways and the maintenance of the old.

One of the interesting units in the scheme for improvement is a projected letter X bridge. If erected it will cross the Seine, one branch connecting the Rue de Rivoli with the Rue de Louvre and the other forming a junction between the wharf of the Louvre and the wharf Conti. A single pier rising from the Seine will hold the center of the bridge up.

ENGLAND HAS BEERLESS BEER

Looks and Tastes Like Real, but Does Not Stagger.

Consul General John L. Griffiths of London furnishes the following information concerning a new temperance drink now being introduced in England:

There has been recently placed on this market a beverage which, it is claimed, is nonintoxicating and still resembles and tastes like the intoxicating beer. It is brewed from malt and hops only and has no preservative in it. It does not look unlike beer, and the taste is very similar. It is made of precisely the same materials as the best English home brewed ale, but alcohol is almost entirely eliminated, and it is stated that there is no chemical admixture of any kind. The amount of alcohol produced by the brewing process in this beverage is given as nine-tenths of 1 per cent, which is less than the percentage to be found in any of the ginger ales, stone beers and other temperance beverages.

The process by which this beverage is made is the invention of a French scientist, while certain modifications were made by one of the professors of the Paris Pasteur Institute and an English brewer. Two kinds are made—ale and stout. The ale, it is claimed, has the flavor of a light beer, and the stout tastes almost exactly like a good quality of London stout.

FIRM INSURES EMPLOYEES.

Policies Given as Bonuses In Novel Merit System.

An innovation by a publishing concern at Glen Ridge, N. J., is being watched with great interest by manufacturers and employers of labor generally in New Jersey and by labor unions.

The company has insured every one of the 150 men and women employed in its plant as a kind of merit system, and the size of the policy is indicative of the esteem in which the employee is held. The insurance takes the place of a bonus in appreciation of extra work and loyalty.

In each case the employee selected the person who was to be the beneficiary, and the company paid the premiums and will continue to pay them so long as the employee remains with it. When he leaves or is discharged the policy is given to him, and he may continue it or permit it to lapse.

The policies do not provide for any accident insurance and are written upon the lives of the persons insured. The company cannot benefit in any way, although the keeping up of the policies will cost many thousands of dollars every year.

YANKEE GRANITE FOR SCOTS.

Aberdeen, Home of Building Stone, Likes Carolina Variety.

Regardless of the fact that Aberdeen is the home of Scotch granite, a granite company of that city has imported a large shipment of the stone from quarries in South Carolina. Why the Scotch company expects the venture to prove successful regardless of the cost of transport across the ocean and the excessive cost of quarrying in the United States as compared with similar work in Scotland is told by the following extract from an Aberdeen publication:

"It is expected that there will be a demand for the American granite because the trade is suffering badly from a scarcity of good gray stone for polished work. All foreign granite coming to this country is brought because there is a demand for a variation from native stones and on account of special beauties in color."

WARSHIPS SOON ANTIQUATED

Weight of Projectiles and Displacement Grow Steadily.

The newly launched Ersatz Frithjof, Germany's tenth Dreadnought, replaces the old battleship Frithjof, built in 1891, which has become obsolete under the twenty year limit enforced in Germany in reckoning the efficiency of battleships. A comparison of the new and old ships is interesting:

	1891	1911
Displacement, tons	4,045	22,000
Length, feet	367	490
Horsepower	4,550	28,000
Speed, knots	17	20
Cost	$875,000	$11,000,000
Armament, inches	3, 9.4	12, 12.2
Armament, inches	8, 2.4	14, 5.9
Armament, inches	—	20, 4.1
Weight of guns	1,614	14,170

Thus, while the displacement is only multiplied five times in the modern vessel, the weight of metal thrown in one discharge of all guns is over eight times as great as in the other type.

FOOTBALL ON BARRED LIST.

Golf, Hockey, Lacrosse and Many Others Dropped—Judges of the Events Will Be Selected From Other Countries Than Sweden.

The international Olympic committee held its meeting at Luxemburg, where the program for the Swedish Olympic games was discussed. A number of changes from the list of events given at London were effected. Several competitions were dropped and some new ones put on. Such sports as hockey, football, golf, lacrosse, polo, horseback, tennis, rackets and boxing were dropped. The Rev. S. de Courcy Laffan, the English delegate, spoke in favor of including boxing, but after an objection from Colonel Balck of Sweden the "manly art" was tabooed. The standing high and broad jumps have been relegated, as also the 400 meter hurdle race. The pentathlon, or five event all around contest, will be revived, but it will be different from that at Athens in 1906, as there will be a 1,500 meter run instead of wrestling.

Then there will be a decathlon, or ten event all around, the list being given below. The question of judging the events was discussed at length, and the Swedes will appoint foreigners, but they must not exceed one-third of the whole jury. Any country sending an entry of five events will be entitled to have a representative on the international jury. No cable or telegraph entries will be received by the Swedish Olympic management.

In the athletic program the following events have been suggested: One hundred meters, 200 meters, 400 meters, 800 meters, 1,500 meters, 5,000 meters and 10,000 meters, all flat races for individual entries, with 110 meter hurdles and a five mile steeplechase in which four of the entries for each country will run as a team and will score as such, though all entries will also be considered as individual entries for individual prizes in the same race. It was pointed out by the English representatives that a relay race of only 400 meters, each man in the teams of four being given 100 meters, would be very dangerous, and its consideration was postponed. A relay race of 1,600 meters was proposed with teams of four, each to run 400 meters, and another team race of 3,000 meters was suggested in which five could enter and three could score. In jumping the items were high and broad jump both standing and running in each case, pole jump, hop, step and jump and a further variety which had better for the present be described as a Swedish jump.

The antiquated and mistaken item of the discus "as at Athens" has finally been dropped from the Olympic program by the decision of the international committee at Luxemburg, and, though the discus will still have two competitions, both of these will be in the "free style," but in the first the athlete will throw with one hand (either right or left), and in the second he will throw with each hand, the score he makes with his right being added to that made with his left to form a total. Exactly the same method will be followed in the score for putting the weight, which therefore has two competitions, and in throwing the javelin held in the middle, but the javelin has a third competition as well, for the "free style," in which a man may hold it how he likes and in either hand provided he uses no aid except his hand in throwing. Both the hammer and the tugs of war will be the same as in London.

A walking race of ten kilometers was added at the special request of the British representatives, but it will be seen that the field events still considerably preponderate over the track races, and this superiority is increased by the inclusion in the athletic program of a pentathlon and a decathlon, in each of which new and independent entries have to be made, as similar performances done in other events will not count. The pentathlon will consist of the broad jump, 200 meters flat, discus, javelin and 1,500 meters flat. The decathlon will include on the first day, 100 meters flat, broad jump, weight, 400 meters flat, high jump, and on the second day, hurdles, discus, pole jump, javelin, 1,500 meters flat. A challenge cup has also been offered by Baron Pierre de Coubertin for a "modern pentathlon," consisting of, one, a foot race over obstacles; two, shooting; three, swimming; four, a test of horsemanship; five, a competition in either boxing, fencing or wrestling.

"Kitty" Bransfield Makes Record.

"Kitty" Bransfield, the Philadelphia Nationals' first baseman, recently made a record of runs scored and driven in that may not be equaled for years. In a recent game at Forbes field the Philadelphia player got five hits, two of them triples, and not only scored three runs himself, but drove in eight others. Kitty's hitting alone gave Philadelphia eleven runs.

Lion to Take Balloon Trip

A live lion is to make balloon ascension at Grand Rapids all through the sixtieth anniversary celebration the last week of this month. The lion is Teddy, a big trained beast from the deserts of Africa. His master, Prof. F. P. Robinson will take Teddy up into the clouds with him when he makes his daily ascension, and when at a great height will cut Teddy loose, and the lion will make a sensational parachute drop. Prof. Robison will follow in a second parachute.

Michigan has seen many kinds of balloon ascensions but never before a flying lion.

The lion balloon ascension is only one of the daring and unique feats that will be performed by aeronauts during the aeronautical meet that will be a feature of the week.

The railroads of Michigan have recognized the importance of Grand Rapids' birthday celebration by granting a half rate fare from all points in Michigan.

The Courage of Captain Plum

few yards away the sound of the voices ceased and there was a hesitancy in the soft tread of the approaching steps. Slowly and now in awesome silence, two figures came down the path and when they reached a point opposite the hummocks Nathaniel could see that they turned their faces toward them and that for a brief space there was something of terror in the gleam he caught of their eyes. In a moment they had passed. Then he heard them running.

"They saw not!" Captain Plum exclaimed.

Obadiah hopped to his feet and rubbed his hands with great glee. "What a temptation, Nat!" he whispered. "What a temptation to frighten them out of their wits! No, they didn't see us, Nat—they didn't see us. The girls are always frightened when they pass these graves. Some day—"

"Graves!" almost shouted the master of the Typhoon. "Graves—and we sitting on 'em!"

"That's all right, Nat—that's all right. They're my graves, so we're welcome to sit on them. I often come here and sit for hours at a time. They like to have me, especially little Jean—the middle one. Perhaps I'll tell you about Jean before you go away."

If Captain Plum had been watching him he would have seen that soft mysterious light again shining in the old councilor's eyes. But now Nathaniel stood erect, his nostrils sniffing the air, catching once more the sweet scent of lilac. He hurried out into the opening, with the old man close behind him, and peered down into the starlit gloom into which the two girls had disappeared. The lovely face that had appeared to him for an instant at Obadiah's cabin began to haunt him. He was sure now that his sudden appearance had not been the only cause of its terror, and he felt that he should have called out to her or followed until he had overtaken her. He could easily have excused his boldness, even if the councilor had been watching him from the cabin door. He was certain that she had passed very near to him again and that the flight which Obadiah had attempted to explain was not because of the graves. He swung about upon his companion, determined to ask for an explanation. The latter seemed to divine his thought.

"Don't let a little scent of lilac disturb you so, young man," he said with singular coldness. "It may cause you great unpleasantness." He went ahead and Nathaniel followed him, assured that the old man's words and the way in which he had spoken them no longer left a doubt as to the identity of his night visitor. She was one of the councilor's wives, so he thought, and his own interest in her was beginning to have an irritating effect. In other words Obadiah was becoming jealous.

For some time there was silence between the two. Obadiah Price now walked with extreme slowness and along paths which seemed to bring him no nearer to the town below. Nathaniel could see that he was absorbed in thoughts of his own, and held his peace. Was it possible that he had spoiled his chances with the councilor because of a pretty face and a bunch of lilacs? The thought tickled Captain Plum despite the delicacy of his situation and he broke into an involuntary laugh. The laugh brought Obadiah to a halt as suddenly as though some one had thrust a bayonet against his breast.

"Nat, you've got good red blood in you," he cried, whirling about. "D'ye suppose you can hate as well as love?"

"Lord deliver us!" exclaimed the astonished Captain Plum. "Hate—love—what the—"

"Yes, hate," repeated the old man with fierce emphasis, so close that his breath struck Nathaniel's face. "You can love a pretty face—and you can hate. I know you can. If you couldn't I would send you back to your sloop with the package tonight. But as it is I am going to relieve you of your oath—for a time."

Nathaniel stepped a pace back and put his hands on his pockets as if to protect the gold there.

"You mean that you want to call off our bargain?" he asked.

The councilor rubbed his hands until the friction of them sent a shiver up Nathaniel's back. "Not that, Nat—O, no, not that! The bargain is good. The gold is yours. You must deliver the package. But you need not do it immediately. Understand? I am lonely back there in my shack. I want company. You must stay with me a week. Eh? Lilacs and pretty faces, Nat! Ho, ho!—You will stay a week, won't you, Nat?"

He spoke so rapidly and his face underwent so many changes, now betraying the keenest excitement, now wrinkled in an ogreish, hantering grin, now almost pleading in its earnestness, that Nathaniel knew not what to make of him. He looked into the heady eyes, sparkling with passion, and the cat-like glitter of them set his blood tingling. What strange adventure was this old man dragging him into? What were the motives, the reasoning, the plot that lay behind this mysterious creature's apparent faith in him? He tried to answer these things in the passing of a moment before he replied. The councilor saw his hesitancy and smiled.

"I will show you many things of interest, Nat," he said. "I will show you just one tonight. Then you will make up your mind, eh? You need not tell me until then."

He took the lead again and this time struck straight down for the town. They passed a number of houses built of logs and Nathaniel caught narrow gleams of light from between close-drawn curtains. In one of these houses he heard the crying of children, and with a return of his grisly humor Obadiah Price prodded him in the ribs and said:

"Good old Israel Laeng lives there—two wives, one old, one young—11 children. The Kingdom of Heaven is open to him!" And from a second he heard the sound of an organ, and from still a third there came the laughter and chatter of several feminine voices, and again Obadiah reached out and prodded Nathaniel in the ribs. There was one great, gloomy, long-built place which they passed, without a ray of light to give it life, and the councilor said: "Three widows there, Nat—fight like cats and dogs. Poor Job killed himself." They avoided the more thickly populated part of the settlement and encountered few people, which seemed to please the councilor. Once they overtook and passed a group of women clad in short skirts and loose waists and with their hair hanging in braids down their backs. For a third time Obadiah nudged Captain Plum.

"It is the king's pleasure that all women wear skirts that come just below the knees," he whispered. "Some of them won't do it and he's wondering how to punish them. Tomorrow there's going to be two public whippings. One of the victims is a man who said that if he was a woman he'd die before he put on knee skirts. After he's whipped he is going to be made to wear 'em. By Urim and Thummin, isn't that choice, Nat?"

He shivered with quiet laughter and dived into a great block of darkness where there seemed to be no houses, keeping close beside Nathaniel. Soon they came to the edge of a grove and deep among the trees Captain Plum caught a glimpse of a lighted window. Obadiah Price now began to exhibit unusual caution. He approached the light slowly, pausing every few steps to peer guardedly about him, and when they had come very near to the window he pulled his companion behind a thick clump of shrubbery. Nathaniel could hear the old man's subdued chuckle and he bent his head to catch what he was about to whisper to him.

"You must make no noise, Nat," he warned. "This is the castle of our priest, king and prophet—James Jesse Strang. I am going to show you what you have never seen before and what you will never look upon again. I have sworn upon the Two Books and I will keep my oath. And then—you will answer the question I asked you back there."

He crept out into the darkness of the trees and Nathaniel followed, his heart throbbing with excitement, every sense alert, and one hand resting on the butt of his pistol. He felt that he was nearing the climax of his day's adventure and now, in the last moment of it, his old caution reasserted itself. He knew that he was among a dangerous people, men who, according to the laws of his country, were criminals in more ways than one. He had seen much of their work along the coasts and he had heard of more of it. He knew that this gloom and sullen quiet of St. James hid cutthroats and pirates and thieves. Still there was nothing ahead to alarm him. The old man dodged the gleams of the lighted window and slunk around to the end of the great house. Here, several feet above his head, was another window, small and veiled with the foliage of a vine that clung in dense masses to the log wall. With the assurance of one who had been there before the councilor mounted some object under the window, lifted himself until his chin was on a level with the glass, and peered within. He was there but an instant and then fell back, chuckling and rubbing his hands.

"Come, Nat!"

He stood a little to one side and bowed with mock politeness. For a moment Captain Plum hesitated. Under ordinary circumstances this spying through a window would have been repugnant to him. But at present something seemed to tell him that it was not to satisfy his curiosity alone that Obadiah Price had given him this opportunity. Would a look through that little window explain some of the mysteries of the night?

There came a low whisper in his ear.

"Do you smell lilac, Nat? Eh?"

The councilor was grinning at him. There was a suggestive gleam in his eyes. He rubbed his hands almost fiercely.

In another instant Captain Plum had stepped upon the object beneath the window and parted the leaves. Breathlessly he looked in. A strange scene met his eyes. He was looking into a vast room, illuminated by a huge hanging lamp suspended almost on a level with his head. Under this lamp there was a long table and at the table sat seven women and one man. The man was at the end nearest the window and all that Nat could see was the back of his head and shoulders. But the women were in full view, three on each side of the table and one at the far end. He guessed the man to be Strang; but he stared at the women and as his eyes traveled back to the one facing him at the end of the table he could scarcely repress the exclamation of surprise that rose to his lips. It was the girl whom he had encountered at the councilor's cabin. She was leaning forward as if in an agony of suspense, her eyes on the king, her lips parted, her hands clutching at a great book which lay open before her. Her cheeks were flushed with excitement. And even as he looked Captain Plum saw her head fall suddenly forward upon the table, encircled by her arms. The heavy braid of her hair, partly undone, glistened like red gold in the lamplight. Her slender body was convulsed with sobs. The woman nearest her reached over and laid a caressing hand on the bowed head, but drew it quickly away as if at a sharp command.

In his eagerness Nathaniel thrust his face through the foliage until his nose touched the glass. When the girl lifted her head she straightened back in her chair—and saw him. There came a sudden white fear in her face, a parting of the lips as if she were on the point of crying out, and then, before the others had seen, she looked again at Strang. She had discovered him and yet she had not revealed her discovery! Nathaniel could have shouted for joy. She had seen him, had recognized him! And because she had not cried out she wanted him! He drew his pistol from its holster and waited. If she signaled for him, if she called him, he would burst the window. The girl was talking now and as she talked she lifted her eyes. Nathaniel pressed his face close against the window, and smiled. That would let her know he was a friend. She seemed to answer him with a little nod and he fancied that her eyes glowed with a mute appeal for his assistance. But only for an instant, and then they turned again to the king. Not until that moment did Nathaniel notice upon her bosom a bunch of crumpled lilacs.

From below the iron grip of the councilor dragged him down.

"That's enough," he whispered. "That's enough—for tonight." He saw the pistol in Nathaniel's hand and gave a sudden breathless cry.

"Nat—Nat—"

He caught Captain Plum's free hand in his.

"Tell me this, Obadiah Price," whispered the master of the Typhoon, "who is she?"

The councilor stood on tiptoe to answer.

"They are the wives of Strang, Nat!"

"But the other?" demanded Nathaniel. The other—

"O, to be sure, to be sure," chuckled Obadiah. "The girl of the lilacs, eh? Why, she's the seventh wife, Nat—that's all, the seventh wife!"

PRESERVING FLOWERS.

How to Keep Them Crisp and in Good Color With Little Trouble.

Long stemmed and fresh, the flowers are laid upon waxed paper that will prevent evaporation of the vital essence, or sap, which is the life, and inclosed in a box with a close cover. Thus conveyed to a friend, lover or invalid they hold color and crispness.

If you would keep them yet longer that they may grace some special "occasion" sit on the cover without disturbing the contents of the box and put the flowers away in a dark, cool place to await the moment of display. Before arranging them in a vase or bowl of water clip the ends of the stems to encourage capillary attraction. Water is not sap, but it will lengthen plant life. A bit of charcoal in the bottom of the vase is a sanitary measure; also the admixture of a teaspoonful of ammonia in a pint of water. Clip the stems daily while the flowers last.

How to Wash Corsets.

To wash corsets first rip the front seam on both sides and take out the steels. Then dissolve some soap jelly, made by shredding half a pound of the best yellow soap in a quart of boiling water and simmering until dissolved in warm water. Two tablespoonfuls of jelly to half a gallon of water are usually sufficient, but hard water may require more. Put the corsets into the suds and allow them to soak for five minutes. Then spread them on a board and brush thoroughly with a well soaped nailbrush, dipping them occasionally into the suds to remove the loosened dirt. When clean, rinse through two lots of warm water and hang up to drip dry. When almost dry iron on the inside with a warm flatiron and after thorough airing replace the front steels and sew them firmly in. If this is carefully done the corsets will come from the washtub as good as new.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS.

They Would Tend to Lower the Cost of Living.

The 2,000,000 miles of unimproved roads which the country has to its discredit are as heavy a burden upon the unfortunate "ultimate consumer" as is an excessive tariff. Every pound of produce hauled from the farm to the market bears an inflated price because of the excessive cost of its transportation from the farm to the point of shipment.

For instance, it costs an average of almost 2 cents more to haul a bushel of wheat from the farm to the station nine miles away than it does to ship a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool, 3,100 miles away. This excessive transportation cost must be made up by the farmer in charging more for his wheat, by the miller in charging more for the flour, by the baker in charging more for bread and finally, of course, by the "ultimate consumer" in paying more for his bread.

As the farmer and the miller are also consumers, the excessive cost of road transportation really levies a tax upon all. Whatever doubt there may have been about the need for systematic road improvement in the United States facts and figures such as these finally dispelled.

If there was ever any work calculated to fill the proverbial "long felt want" it was the work of the office of public roads.

JUDGE FOR GOOD ROADS.

W. W. Harndon Announced His Improved Highway Policy.

"If there is one thing I am unqualifiedly for," W. W. Harnden, a new county judge in Missouri, said recently, "it is good roads and plenty of them. I believe it is the most important function of the county court to provide them. It is being realized over all this country—and with the advent of the motorcars more than ever—that good roads are the most important asset of any community.

"So far as I am concerned I shall do all in my power to see to it that the rock road system of Jackson county is a model both in the quantity and the quality of its roads. And I believe that these roads should be built primarily with a view to the convenience and profit of Kansas City, which supplies most of the funds.

"It is my idea that we should first see to it that the roads are kept in first class repair and then build more roads. One thing I hope to accomplish, with the co-operation of Judge Patterson, is greater facility in the annual oiling of the roads. It is my idea that enough men should be put on the job to finish the oiling of the roads, say, in a month, so that they would be clean and free from dust during the season when those who drive can enjoy them."

TO FORCE ROAD BUILDING.

Negligent Supervisors Will Be Prosecuted by Altoona Autoists.

Finding that requests and entreaties had failed, officials of the Altoona (Pa.) Motor club have been instructed to take legal steps to compel road supervisors to clear the public roads of loose stones and put the highways in good condition. At a meeting it was decided to ask the district attorney to prosecute all negligent officials. While most of the supervisors have co-operated with the motorists, several of them having charge of two of the most traveled roads in this section have done nothing.

Make the Roads Beautiful.

The National Good Roads association in convention recently recommended that the enlisted men of the army be used in making good roads. How better could they serve the country than by beautifying and making the roadways more serviceable? We remember that wherever Caesar and his legions went good roads followed, and some of those highways are there today to prove that they are the best thoroughfares in Europe. If this order ever went into effect a regiment would consist of about six privates the next morning.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

"Germany" Schaefer Talks About Playing the Infield

SECOND HARDEST POSITION.

Man at the Keystone Station Is Given Better Chance to Show Up Than Any Other Player—He Generally Lasts Longer in Game.

No. XVI.

By HERMAN SCHAEFER.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

What are the important qualities for a successful infielder in the major leagues today? Well, the only players who become successful infielders are those with a natural aptitude for baseball. A good mechanical player who can hit at a fair clip may make good and hold a position in the outfield, but when he comes to the infield he must be a quick thinker, fast fielder and a natural player as well.

How many baseball fans have thought of the build of these infielders and the part that plays in determining the qualification for a certain position? For instance, take the first baseman. He must be a tall, rangy fellow who can cover ground, but more especially one who has a reach to catch brows a trifle wild. Height and reach are valuable in stepping forward to meet thrown balls. Many a first sacker who understands his position robs a batsman of hits merely by stretching out to meet them. In the course of a season this one or two feet advantage will mean a score or more less base hits.

Speaking of the second baseman or the shortstop, I will say that the latter should be a short, chunky fellow, something on the dachshund order, for he has to gather the ball in from all positions while on the run, so the lower they are to the ground the better. The majority of the third suckers in the major leagues today are small men or fellows of medium height, but it is not essential there.

As you know, second base is the key to the infield. Second sack gives a player an opportunity to show up better than any other position, and I believe a player will last longer in the game in this position than any other—that is, if he is a natural and not a made ball player. A second baseman should go for short flies and depend on the outfielders for the coaching, as they are in a better position to judge the ball. The keystone sacker should go in for the short throw with the catcher, sending the ball down for a man and a runner at third. This play requires practice and a good throwing catcher. When running down a man between the bases go after him on the jump and get him under full headway before throwing the ball.

Recently I was asked who I thought was the gamest man in baseball. I know I have been in the game for many years, but I'll tell you I have not had the chance to size them all up, but I will hand it to Kid Elberfeld. Some years ago when I was playing second base for the Detroit Tigers I had a little experience with the Kid. The latter is game to the core. No matter what you do to him, he will take it without batting an eye. But you have to watch out when his chance comes. When he was playing with New York he got me once when I wasn't looking for anything and gave me a pretty hard bumping as I came back to the bag. I tried to get back at him and learned how luck will break against a fellow. The next time I went to bat I passed the word that if I reached first no one was to give me the signal, because I would go down on the first ball pitched, having an engagement at second. I had a good lead and was away with the pitch. But there wasn't a chance to get Norman, because Catcher Kleinow pulled him off the bag with a wide throw, and I had to keep on for third without a chance to exchange compliments. I was ready for the Kid when the time came. He reached first, and I tipped O'Leary that I would take the throw if he stole. When he came down I was all ready, with my elbows in the right place. He came in just as I wanted him to, spikes first and feet up in the air. But the throw was short, and I had to run in to get the ball. Afterward Elberfeld told me he had me dead if I hadn't pulled off the bag. But that's what he thought.

ED WALSH HAS HOBBY.

Does Not Care For Victories, but Likes His Strikeouts.

Most every ball player has his hobby or peculiarity, and Ed Walsh, the star heaver of the Chicago Americans, has one that is just about the limit. Walsh doesn't pay much attention to the shutouts he records, the games he wins, the hits made off him or the bases on balls he passes out, but he does dote on his strikeout record.

Recently Walsh pitched against Cleveland and managed to win, more through his masterly pitching than through the efforts of his teammates. A certain baseball critic happened to meet Walsh after the game and remarked that he was forced to the limit to win. Walsh replied that hard luck was pursuing him this spring and that he should have won all but a few of the games in which he worked but for tough breaks.

"By the way, how many games have you won and lost this year?" the big fellow was asked.

"You've got me there," he replied. "I haven't the slightest idea how I stand now, but I have struck out seventy-two men so far."

ED WALSH, CHICAGO AMERICANS' GRACE TWIRLER.

The critic was more than surprised to learn that the strikeouts interested Walsh more than any other feature of his work, and he frankly confessed that keeping track of his strikeouts was his one and only hobby in baseball.

PILAKOFF AFTER GOTCH.

Now Foreign Grappler Would Try Conclusions With Champion.

Pilakoff, the powerful young English giant wrestler, who came to this country to meet the winner of the Zbysco-Gotch match, has issued a challenge direct to Frank Gotch for the world's championship. Pilakoff is twenty-five years of age, stands six feet two inches in height and weighs in the best physical condition 220 pounds. He won the greatest international tournament ever held in Europe, which took place in Moscow, Russia, in which Padonbury, the Russian gladiator, won the extra heavyweight class.

Pilakoff will meet all comers, not only as a mat artist, but as a strong man, as he performs some wonderful feats of strength.

BALL TEAM GOING TO JAPAN.

Chicago University Boys to Take Long Trip to Play Brown Men.

The alumni and undergraduate body of Chicago university are looking forward to the long baseball trip planned for the Maroon nine. Some time ago the Waseda university of Tokyo, Japan, sent a challenge to the Chicagoans for a series of baseball games to be played in the orient. It has been announced that the board of culture and athletics at a meeting to reconsider the proposition decided to accept the challenge. It is further announced that the men who will make the trip will practice regularly during the summer months in order to be in fit condition and will attend classes so as to be eligible for the next spring season.
